DEVALUED DOLLAR 'JUST START'

Nixon Talking Tough on Trade

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon said today the 10 per cent devaluation of the United States dollar Monday night must be followed by tough trade legislation erecting some barriers "to get a fairer shake" for U.S. businessmen and ease that country's chronic trade deficit.

The president also indicated a sterner U.S. stance in trade talks with other countries, saying efforts will be made to erase restrictions on U.S. sales abroad.

Nixon said the legislation is needed to "get other nations away from their discriminatory policies."

"Devaluation of the dollar . . . is at best only a temporary solution" to lose pressure on the dollar, the president said.

He gave no specifics on his proposals but said he was "not talking about another round of lowering barriers."

"We must go up as well as down," the president said, because that is "the only way to get a fair shake for America abroad."

"Only by being able to go up" in some trade categories "will we be able to get others to come down," he said.

He and Treasury Secretary George Shultz discussed the impact of U.S. markets being flooded by foreign-produced goods and the president said that in some cases the imports can "drive a U.S. business right out of existence."

"To get a policy of freer trade we must always have in the background protection," Nixon said.

U.S. stock markets today went wild in early trading with the Dow Jones stock index jumping a record 21.60 points to 1013.17 in the first half-hour of business.

NO TIMETABLE

A record 15.69 million shares changed hands in the first two hours of trading on Wall Street and then slowed and prices fell slightly as profit-takers moved in.

The market closed at 996.69 on the index a gain of five points overall for the day.

Shultz had said in announcing the dollar devaluation Monday night that Nixon would send Congress "comprehensive trade legislation" with unspecified safeguards against disruption of domestic industries as a result of imports.

Nixon set no timetable for submission of the legislation.

But the package cannot go to Capital Hill before next week, since Congress is in recess.

In Ottawa, Finance Minister John Turner confirmed that the Canadian dollar will continue to float, or find its own value on foreign-exchange markets.

RUNNING PARALLEL

Turner had been advised in advance of the U.S. decision.

Trade Minister Alastair Gillespie predicted the Canadian dollar will follow the drop of the U.S. dollar in relation to other currencies.

When the U.S. last devalued its currency in December, 1971—an effective devaluation of about 11 per cent—the Canadian dollar followed more or less in step despite the publicly-expressed anticipation of U.S. officials that it would not fall as much.

On the London foreign exchange market the Canadian dollar was "running more or less parallel with the United States dollar," a banking spokesman said.

The Royal Bank of Canada here advised Canadian tourists to exchange only enough money for their immediate needs allowing several days for the market to settle down.

Generally the Canadian dollar was a little stronger than the U.S. one, closing at $100.75 in terms of U.S. funds.

Socred Guards Books

At a two-minute meeting this morning the NDP government took the first step in honoring a pre-election pledge of full financial accountability in the administration of the province.

For the first time in more than 20 years, an opposition MLA — Alex Fraser (SC-Cariboo) — was elected to the key job of chairing the legislature's select standing committee on public accounts and printing.

Under the former Social Credit administration the position always went to a Socred. As a result, opposition parties consistently complained they were frustrated in their efforts to call ministers before the committee and examine all government books to determine how the public's money was being spent.

The conveners of the various select standing committees are usually named chairmen but at today's first meeting of the public accounts committee when convener Chris D'Arcy (NDP—Rossland-Trail) called for nominations, Fraser was nominated by Newell Morrison (SC—Victoria) and unanimously elected.

Roy Cummings (NDP—Little Mountain) was elected secretary.

SPILL COMMITTEE

Jim Gorst (NDP-Esquimalt) was elected chairman of the legislature's special committee on oil spills.

Harold Steeves (NDP-Richmond) was elected secretary of the committee at its organizational meeting.

The committee was established earlier this session by Premier Barrett to look into the problem of oil transportation through B.C. coastal waters.

Six other select standing committees also held their first organizational meetings today and the posts of chairman and secretaries chosen in each case were NDP.

Forestry and fisheries: chairman, Robert Skelly (Alberni), secretary, Don Lockstead (Mackenzie).

Mining and railways: chairman, Graham Lee (Prince Rupert); secretary, Alf Nunweiler (Fort George).

Labor: chairman, Colin Gablemann (North Vancouver-Seymour); secretary, Graham Lea (Prince Rupert).

Agriculture: chairman, Gerry Anderson (Kamloops); secretary, Lorne Nicolson (Nelson-Creston).

Social welfare and education: chairman, Rosemary Brown (Vancouver Burrard); secretary, Peter Rolston (Dewdney).

Municipal matters: chairman, Alf Nunweiler; secretary, Carl Liden (Delta).

The Naked Truth

A Vancouver Island school teacher took some pictures of crows in the trees near the legislature Monday afternoon. He also shot pictures of a lark.

"I was poising my camera when I suddenly saw naked flesh. I couldn't believe it."

Two teenage boys, about 16, had climbed the tree and stripped naked.

"I thought it just couldn't be true, especially not in Victoria," he said. So he took pictures of the event for posterity.

The teacher, who said he would prefer his name not be used, said he was at the buildings with his class Monday afternoon for a tour of the legislature.

While the students were on a guided tour, the teacher decided to take pictures of some of Victoria's more spectacular sights.

"I heard some crows cawing up the tree and I thought that might make a good picture," he said.

"But when I looked up . . . I almost dropped my camera.

"I guess they climbed up and then took their clothes off. It was quite chilly."

Temperature at 1:30 p.m. was a cool 47 degrees.

Later the boys came down, getting dressed on the way.

They gave no explanation for their tree-top cavorting.

The incident was not on the police blotter today, indicating that nobody complained.

When told about the incident, one passerby commented: "Naked up a tree? Must have been taxpayers!"

OWEN NAMED LT.-GOV.

Walter Stewart Owen of Vancouver has been appointed lieutenant-governor of British Columbia, the prime minister's office announced in Ottawa today. (Background story on Page 2).

Owen, to be sworn into office March 19, replaces J. R. Nicholson, who is retiring for personal reasons.

Pollution Fixing Costs Ford $7M

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Ford Motor Co. was fined $7 million today on charges that its employees illegally tampered with 1973 Ford cars undergoing anti-pollution tests, the U.S. justice department said.

At the same time, the company in Detroit and Oakville announced record earnings for both the Canadian and U.S. operations.

Ford filed a no-contest plea to a 350-count criminal information, filed in the U.S. District Court in Detroit by the justice department, and signed a consent decree concluding a civil suit.

The court proposed the maximum fine of $3.5 million in the criminal case. It also approved a $3.5 million penalty agreed to by Ford and the government in the civil case.

In addition, Ford was enjoined from committing similar violations in the future. The matter goes back to last April and May when Ford submitted its anti-pollution test data required for federal certification of its 1973 cars.

On May 16, the firm withdrew its application and told the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) they had been based on tests which included unauthorized and previously unreported maintenance.

The Clean Air Act and EPA regulations make it a criminal offence knowingly to submit false information on testing and reporting of maintenance on prototype engines.

The criminal information charged Ford with making four false reports to the EPA in its applications for certification of four sizes of engines.

The criminal action contained 346 counts specifying engine maintenance that was not reported such as installing new spark plugs, regapping spark plugs, resetting ignition timing, replacing points and cleaning carburetors.

Ford in Detroit reported sales and net income reached all-time highs.

Worldwide dollar sales for Ford was $20.2 billion, up 23 per cent from sales of $16.4 billion in 1971.

Henry Ford II, board chairman, and Lee Iacocca, president, reported consolidated net income hit a record $870 million in 1972, compared with $657 million in 1971, and the previous record of $703 million in 1965.

They said earnings equalled $8.52 a share last year, up 38 per cent from the $6.18 a share earned in 1971 and a 35-per-cent increase over the previous high of $6.33 a share in 1965.

In Oakville, Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. consolidated net income after taxes in 1972 was $101,600,000 or $12.25 a share, up 34 per cent from $75,800,000 and $9.14 in the previous year.

Consolidated sales rose to a record $3,084 million from $2,468 in 1971. They include the company's Canadian operations and those in overseas subsidiaries in Australia, South Africa, New Zealand and Singapore. Sales to the U.S. parent company also were included for the first time.

Canadian sales, including those to Ford in the U.S., increased 26 per cent to $2,378 million from $1,895 million.

Net income from Canadian operations totalled $90,500,000, a 69-per-cent jump from $53,400,000 in 1971.

POSTIES VOTING ON NEW CONTRACT

OTTAWA (CP) — Postal workers will decide today and Wednesday whether to endorse or reject a tentative contract settlement worked out three weeks ago between union and government negotiators.

As voting began the 28,000 members of the Council of Postal Unions were weighing statements by their leaders for and against the proposals.

Results of the vote are expected Thursday or Friday.

Acceptance of the tentative agreement will mean an end to threats of a legal nationwide postal strike until 1975. Contract talks began a year ago and the last working agreement expired in March.

James McCall, a co-chairman of the council, said Monday he was hoping for a heavy turnout by the postal workers.

Hanoi Frees Canadian

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Marc Cayer, one of two Canadians held as prisoners of war by North Vietnam, has been released in Hanoi, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp told the Commons today.

Cayer was captured in Vietnam during the 1968 Tet offensive.

Sharp said he had been released into the custody of the Canadian representative at Hanoi.

The minister said Cayer was well and in good spirits and arrangements were being made to return the prisoner home.

Sharp made no reference to Lloyd Oppel of Courtenay, B.C., the second Canadian prisoner in North Vietnam who was captured in Laos last fall.

Meanwhile, North Vietnam has agreed to release 20 more prisoners of war within the next few days, the Pentagon announced today.

The surprise release will raise to 163 the number of Americans freed by Hanoi and the Viet Cong.

Preliminary medical examinations today showed the 142 prisoners freed Monday are in generally good health.

Two of them may fly to the United States today to be at the bedsides of critically-ill relatives.

Alaska Fights Ruling

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Alaska will ask the United States Supreme Court to review a lower-court ruling that has blocked construction of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline, Gov. William Egan says.

Construction was sidetracked last Friday by a ruling of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

The state also will ask the interior department to shift to Alaska control of the 789-mile pipeline corridor from the Arctic North Slope to the southern port of Valdez, Egan said Monday.

Meanwhile, Alaska Senators Ted Stevens and Mike Gravel said they plan to introduce legislation to permit construction of the line.

EXPERTS SEE RECESSION

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States is almost unavoidably headed for an economic recession later this year or early in 1974, two economists said today.

"Indeed, the challenge facing policy makers in the coming year will be to avoid a recession of classic dimension," said Wildred Lewis Jr., chief economist for the National Planning Association, Washington.

Henry Kaufman, an economist with Salmon Brothers, New York, told a congressional committee, "late this year, or no later than early 1974, the real rate of economic growth may be only a small fraction of the current high rate, and a complete lack of real growth for a short time span cannot be entirely ruled out."

Lewis and Kaufman disagreed somewhat on the fine points of what could be done about it, but their central theme was the same: The economy is booming at such a pace now that inflation is inevitable, and inflation will lead to recession.

Kaufman said an "enormously stimulative fiscal and monetary expansion" had fired up an economic boom, but that steps had not been taken to assure that the boom could be controlled before inflation sets in.

"Now we are in the midst of an economic boom, moving to even higher utilization of real resources with the U.S. unemployment rate falling perhaps to 4.5 per cent by mid-year," Kaufman said.

"If additional excesses are to be avoided and the boom is to continue, checking inflation is necessary but extremely dif-

Service Marks Owen's Legal Career

The appointment of Walter Stewart Owen QC, a Vancouver lawyer, as British Columbia's next lieutenant-governor was announced today by Prime Minister Trudeau.

Owen, 69, succeeds Lt.-Gov. John Nicholson who requested retirement from the post some months ago.

The new lieutenant-governor, the 22nd since B.C. entered Confederation in 1871, has been in law practice since 1928 and is currently a senior partner in the firm Owen Bird.

He has served on a number of international conferences on law, including the Commonwealth law conference, the International Commission of Jurists and the International Bar Association.

Owen served as president of the Canadian Bar Association in 1958-59 and has been a member of the association's council for more than 30 years.

Owen was a crown prosecutor in Vancouver from 1933-42. He was a delegate to the World YMCA Conference in Helsinki, Finland, in 1926 and to the Commonwealth Law Conferences in London, England, in 1955 and again in Ottawa in 1960.

He has been closely connected with numerous community organizations over the years, serving on the Metropolitan Vancouver YMCA advisory board, as a director of the G.F. Strong Rehabilitation Centre, as honorary governor of the Canadian Association for Retarded Children, as a member of the Salvation Army advisory board. He is a past president of the Shaugnessy Golf Club.

Owen has held directorates in numerous companies including Imperial Life Assurance Co. of Canada, Greyhound Lines of Canada Ltd. and Monsanto Canada Ltd.

The position of lieutenant-governor carries an annual salary of $18,000.

Asked to comment on the appointment today, Premier Dave Barrett said he was "very pleased" that the announcement has been made.

He said he was informed of the federal government's decision in a telephone call from Trudeau several days ago.

Barrett said the appointment is the federal government's prerogative and added: "I'm sure that whoever they appoint, we can work together very well."

Asked about the delay in the appointment, Barrett said he understood it had something to do with the minority government in Ottawa. There had been some discussions, he said, between the prime minister and the leader of the opposition about the appointment.

GO-KART TRACK LIKELY ON VIC WEST HELIPORT

Go-karts and minibikes may now be allowed at Victoria West heliport following a second try by a parents group seeking city council approval for use of the asphalt strip on Kimta Road.

Harold Dunaway, 530 Mary, today headed a delegation which earlier had its request to use the heliport site rejected.

He told council's public works committee his group now felt it could clear the site in two minutes instead of 10 in the case of an emergency.

Ald. Sam Bawlf expressed fears that approval for go-karts for three hours on Sunday afternoons would be "carrot" for young people throughout the region to push for increased use of the site.

"Are we in fact stopping the use of these machines on the streets during the week, or are we compounding the problem?" he asked.

Dunaway said it was not a question of compounding the problem since the small motorized vehicles "have been around for years."

"We want to help the police keep these things off the road," he said.

Alastair Slydell, 241 Robert, owner of one of the machines, said some young people had already been prosecuted and put on probation for using their mini-machines on the street and in vacant lots.

Ald. Clyde Savage wanted to know what would prevent other people using the heliport without supervision.

Dunaway said the heliport gate is now left open by the city 24 hours a day. He said his parents group would make sure permission was gained by all users.

Ald. Mike Young doubted the ability of parents to supervise the activity.

Ald. Bawlf moved that the committee commend the parents for their concern but asked them to look for a regional site.

Ald. Alf Hood launched an eloquent protest: "We're just staving this thing off and putting it years down the way.

"This should be examined, there's no outlay of funds involved."

The aldermen found themselves locked in a two-two vote. Ald. Savage cast the deciding vote in favor.

"I feel there should be more discussion," he said.

The committee agreed to consult the provincial government and the federal government of transport.

McGavin Closes Mainland Plant

McGavin Toastmaster Ltd. has closed down the MacDonald bread distribution centre in Vancouver that it purchased from MacDonald Bakeries of Victoria.

A total of 17 employees will be dismissed Feb. 24 as a result of the move.

The distribution centre, located in Richmond, was used to distribute MacDonald's bread on the mainland prior to the purchase by McGavins.

MacDonald's employees in Richmond today said they were "very bitter" about the decision.

"It came as a very big surprise. We understood we would be kept on," one longtime employee said.

"I guess there is nothing we can do."

For nine of the employees it was the second time McGavins had fired them.

They had worked for McGavin's until the company closed its Broadway plant two years ago.

At that time employees who were laid off formed a bakery of their own. One year ago the new bakery merged with MacDonald's to assist the Vancouver Island bakery with distribution on the mainland.

At the time of the sale to McGavin's, MacDonald's Bakery said it would retain its present staff level or perhaps increase it on the Island. There was no mention of the Richmond employees.

ALBERNI LOGGERS WALK OUT

PORT ALBERNI — Just over 1,200 loggers at three MacMillan Bloedel logging operations remained off work today in a dispute over non-union men employed by contractors and sub-contractors.

Both MacMillan Bloedel and Local 1-85, International Woodworkers of America, asked for provincial intervention and a labor department representative was en route here.

Affected by the walkout which started Monday are the Cameron, Franklin River and Sproat Lake logging divisions.

The IWA is demanding that members of the Truck Loggers Association, Western Log Haulers Association and Upper Island Truck and Equipment Owners Association be brought under terms of the union agreement or pay an operating permit to the union.

ficult to achieve in a setting in which economic friction is quite likely.

". . . Actually, I believe that it is probably too late to tame this economic boom without experiencing some dislocations."

Kaufman predicted that in order to clamp restraints on an economy that will be demanding more and more credit, "interest rates, particularly money rates, will continue to rise sharply."

Lewis said all the signs now point to a "good old fashioned so-called classic recession."

"At the present time, the signs are far from promising," Lewis said. "On the one hand, we have very rapid investment boom that we know has to taper off as we approach full employment. Second, state and local government budgets are becoming moderately more restrictive, and the federal budget, under administration plans, sharply more restrictive.

"Finally, residential construction is already beginning to feel the pinch from tightening in credit markets, and will probably be declining anyway after last year's very strong performance. This sector can decline sharply if an acceleration of inflation causes the monetary authorities to tighten credit further.

"If these forces all come together, as they show every sign of doing around mid-year of shortly thereafter, a recession will be nearly unavoidable."

. . . VIETNAM

Vietnamese troops in five northern provinces are still battling to retake territory seized by Communists after the ceasefire two weeks ago.

Under terms of the Jan. 28 truce, the two sides were to keep territory they controlled when the ceasefire took effect but were forbidden to launch further land-grabbing forays.

In Saigon, military spokesmen said despite the release of war prisoners in South Viernam, fighting was on the increase across the country today and military officials reported a battle that lasted 10 hours Monday in the Central Highlands.

Sources said government rangers backed by air and artillery support drove back the attack, killing 59 Communists at a cost of one South Vietnamese soldier dead and five wounded.

A remote air base in Thailand's border region with Laos will become the new headquarters for U.S. military forces in Southeast Asia once the withdrawal from Vietnam is completed.

Moving there to assume command will be Air Force Gen. John Vogt, who at present commands all U.S. air operations in Southeast Asia with headquarters in Saigon.

Meanwhile, today's expected Laotian ceasefire agreement collapsed over last-minute political differences with the Communist Pathet Lao and heightened fighting was reported.

"It has strengthened against the U.S. dollar but is following the line of devaluation," a spokesman said.

In sterling terms, it ranged from $2.41 to $2.43 while the American dollar was $2.43 to $2.44.

The Canadian Wheat Board, meanwhile, withdrew all price quotations on export wheat at the opening of business today because of the uncertain international currency situation.

In effect, the move means Canada is staying out of the world wheat market until exchange values settle down.

Domestic quotations were not affected.

European governments and bankers welcomed the devaluation today and predicted it would settle the international monetary crisis — at least for the moment.

But there was confusion throughout the world as governments sought to realign their own currencies.

The first effect was in Japan where the government announced the yen would be allowed to float, meaning it would rise slightly.

Italy allowed its lira to float and the expectation was it would fall slightly.

Many other governments are waiting to see what the British pound and the West German mark would do.

West German finance minister Helmut Schmidt described devaluation of the U.S. dollar as a solution that "got at the source of the problem."

He said West Germans are not bound to intervene again to support the dollar but "we are not even dreaming of floating the mark."

Finance ministers of the nine European Common Market nations postponed an emergency meeting, originally scheduled for late today, until Wednesday, a market spokesman said.

No official explanation was given, but the floating of the Italian Lira and the absence of the entire market executive commission at a European Parliament meeting in Luxembourg were suggested as possible reasons.

Many world money exchanges stayed closed today, to give governments and central banks time to fix new exchange rates for the dollar. Banks and hotels cashed dollars and travelers cheques, but acted on their own to deduct most or all of the 10 per cent.

SEX EDUCATION NOW MINUS SEX

The sex has gone out of sex education but it's all in the name of the game.

Greater Victoria school board's Family Life and Sex Education Program will now be called simply the Family Life Program.

In discussing a minor administrative change in the program Monday night, the board's instruction-curriculum committee agreed it was time to change the name.

"Since you can't have family life without sex, I wonder if the word sex isn't redundant," Trustee Philip Ney suggested.

"I agree, let's just take that word out, I'm sick of it," said Trustee Daphne Temple.

"It's a blanket policy anyway," someone added.

Militant Protestant Urges Free Ulster

BELFAST — In a startling change in his tactics and thinking, militant Protestant William Craig suggested Monday an independent Northern Ireland with full status for the Catholic minority.

The new state would have special relationships with both Britain and the Irish Republic. Most important of all, it would guarantee full equality to Catholics, first through a "system of checks and balances" and later through the establishment of normal non-sectarian politics.

Craig was speaking at a rally of his Vanguard movement, one of the groups which instigated a one-day Protestant strike last Wednesday in which the accompanying violence led to the deaths of five persons.

He said the roots of the problem in Ulster were the facts that Protestants opposed union with the Irish Republic, while Catholics would never give allegiance to Britain. However, Britain is now prepared to cede the territory, and only holds on to it because the majority for the time being wanted to stay with Britain, Craig said. So both sectarian communities should be thinking of an independent dominion of Ulster which would satisfy "all the interests involved."

If both Protestants and Catholics gave their allegiance to the new state, it would ultimately lead to normal political — non-religious — divisions. This would take time, though, and in the short term there would have to be checks and balances which led to power-sharing between the two communities, Craig said.

The first Catholic reaction to the proposals were, as expected, cynical.

Gerry Fitt of the Social Democratic and Labor Party said there seems to have been a "miraculous transformation in Mr. Craig's thinking since last Wednesday's actions so discredited him throughout these islands."

Fitt, whose party is the largest Catholic group, added: "Mr. Craig cannot be surprised if Catholics are not willing to rush with open arms to acclaim him as the political genius of the century on the basis of this speech."

COLD SEATS AT CARNIVAL were the order of the day in Lethbridge after students taking part in the Community College's winter frolic absconded with all the seats from the campus toilets. The students held the seats for a ransom of $1 each. Any proceeds will go to a school for retarded children.

Union Tie-In Denied

A proposal to disband the municipal force in favor of a contract with the RCMP has nothing to do with recent unionization of Central Saanich police, Ald. Jean Butler said today.

Butler said a cost study revealed that RCMP could police Central Saanich for about $70,000 in contrast to the municipal police force 1973 budget which totalled $121,266.90.

The change being considered by council has prompted much "emotional reaction", Butler said.

In a personal survey of local businesses on Monday, the alderman said that all firms acknowledged the economic good sense of such a change.

Loss of jobs to five men, including Chief John Gelling and a secretary would be the sad part of such a move, admitted Ald. Butler.

"However the municipality would not be cold-blooded about it," she said.

The municipality has not as yet signed an agreement with the B.C. Federation of Police Officers and police force members are contracted on a 30-day basis.

Council will discuss the proposal with police Association members on Thursday.

Cities Eye Income Tax Share

Municipalities deserve a source of revenue that reflects the country's booming economy, Oak Bay Mayor Francis Elford said today.

Commenting on her role on a special three-member committee of the Union of B.C. Municipalities, Elford said members will offer to assist the provincial government in pressing for a larger share of the federal income tax dollar in return for establishing a municipal share of that revenue.

"We don't get any of that income tax money now," said Elford.

"This per capita grant that we get, rather than being a whimsical amount with no relation to provincial revenues, should be tied to the amount of income tax revenue that goes to the province."

Elford said the committee, which includes Vancouver's Mayor Art Phillips and Mayor Al Older of Chilliwack, wants municipalities to share in income tax revenue so the burden can be lightened on property taxes.

"Our main source of revenue is property taxes now," Elford said, "and this is very difficult for fixed income people to keep with while still retaining any kind of security and dignity."

She said costs of education, welfare, hospital construction and health should not be placed on the property owners.

"These are properly matters to be paid for according to ability to pay," she said, "which means on income taxes."

Elford said the UBCM would like to see a revenue-sharing program which would mean the municipal per capita grant would respond directly to the amount of income tax revenue given to the province.

She said the provincial share of taxes given by the federal government has gone up at a much faster rate than the municipal per capita grant given by the provincial government.

Giving the municipalities a greater share would not necessittate higher tax rates, she said.

"We'd be cutting the pie three ways but that wouldn't necessarily mean needing a bigger pie.

"Perhaps the federal government hasn't been careful with their spending, while we at the municipal level know how to scrap and scrounge on limited budgets.

"We just want a share of our booming economy."

In offering assistance to the provincial government in the fight for more federal income tax revenue, Elford said the UBCM hopes to put them in a stronger position in April when provincial and federal governments meet to discuss changes in revenue-sharing arrangements.

ROW FLARES OVER McGOVERN CASH

VANCOUVER (CP) — The co-ordinator of the Vancouver McGovern Committee said that Canadians who supported the Democratic party were prevented from making contributions to last fall's U.S. presidential election while a Canadian who is a prominent Republican supporter was not.

Kitty Brewer said the Democrats returned $2,500 collected for Senator George McGovern because it came from Canadians. But the Republicans accepted $30,000—and possibly up to $100,000—from millionaire Frank McMahon, a Canadian who made his contribution through his Palm Beach, Fla., address.

After the donation from McMahon came to light last week, a U.S. justice department official said it was okay for foreigners to contribute to the U.S. presidential campaign as long as they were not agents of a foreign government or political party.

Mrs. Brewer called the apparent contradiction another example of the "corrupt Nixon campaign."

She said: "Canadians for McGovern were not of the type who had homes in Florida through which they could channel large cheques."

In Washington, an official of the Democratic Party said today the party turned back all contributions from foreigners to McGovern's campaign because it didn't want to risk trouble with an unclear statute.

Chevron Gasolines with F-310* reduce harmful deposits that build up inside your engine.

Right from Day 1 in the life of your car, harmful deposits can start to accumulate on the critical parts of the engine, reducing its efficiency.

Most gasoline companies have conventional detergent additives designed to hold down carburetor deposits. But while some of these gasoline additives have limited success in controlling deposit build-up in parts of the carburetor, F-310 keeps all the critical parts of the carburetor clean and it helps keep other critical parts of the engine clean, too.

In fact, it can take as little as 2,000 miles with F-310 to reduce critical deposits built up by thousands of miles of driving with other gasolines.

If this is true, you should be using Chevron gasolines with F-310 in your car, shouldn't you?

It is true.

The Machinery Creaked Again

Once again arbitrary government action to re-set the value of the United States dollar in terms of gold has been used to do what American commercial and consumer practice would not do voluntarily. The depreciated U.S. dollar will make imported goods cost more in that country and presumably tend to curb purchases, and it will make American goods less costly in the countries which import them, and presumably stimulate purchases there.

The net result should be that United States funds will not flow abroad so readily as heretofore. This will help to check the forces which serve to lower the dollar's price in terms of other currencies. Any such lowering on the money markets of the world, and particularly any likelihood that this depreciation may occur, customarily brings on a heavy selling pressure on the dollar, as speculators hurry to trade dollars for marks, yen, or other stable currencies. This action, of course, accentuates the trend and helps to bring on the devaluation which the speculators anticipate.

Since so much of Canada's trade is with the United States, both exports and imports, the Canadian dollar, although floating freely in the market, is not likely to diverge greatly from the course of the United States dollar. The result is that the Canadian dollar will, like its North American partner, tend to depreciate in terms of other foreign currencies. Canada, too, should find it easier to sell its goods in those countries, and also find its purchases from them costing somewhat more.

The sudden United States action in devaluing the dollar by 10 per cent is a measure of the severe situation which faced the country. It was only 14 months ago that somewhat similar action was taken. West Germany and Japan may bear the brunt of the present devaluation, since their products will cost correspondingly more in the United States.

But some Americans are unlikely to let higher prices deter them from buying Japanese electronic equipment, cars or motorcycles, or German goods of many kinds. To the extent that they are not deterred, the higher prices will contribute to the inflationary spiral in the United States. On the other hand, increased U.S. exports to West Germany, Japan and the European Common Market may stimulate the American economy with beneficial results. The same effects should be evident in Canada, although perhaps to a lesser extent.

The whole situation again illustrates the need for a more workable international monetary system. Particularly in the last few years, when the rising trade of West Germany and Japan has poured goods into the world markets, and the new influence of the European Common Market has posed exporting countries with new potential problems, the position of the United States has tended to deteriorate under pressure.

Much of the American problem has been due, not so directly to the flow of U.S. money overseas to buy foreign goods, as to the great outward flow of investment capital—and Canada of all countries has experienced this. The result has been occasional situations of strained U.S. reserves, with international speculators taking full advantage.

The roadblocks to easy international trade are sufficiently numerous and prominent not to require any impediments arising from currency problems. The world currency and financing situation has not been properly adapted to the new international economy: the rise of the great trading blocs, the growth of the international corporations with their immense transfers of funds, and the new demands of the less developed countries.

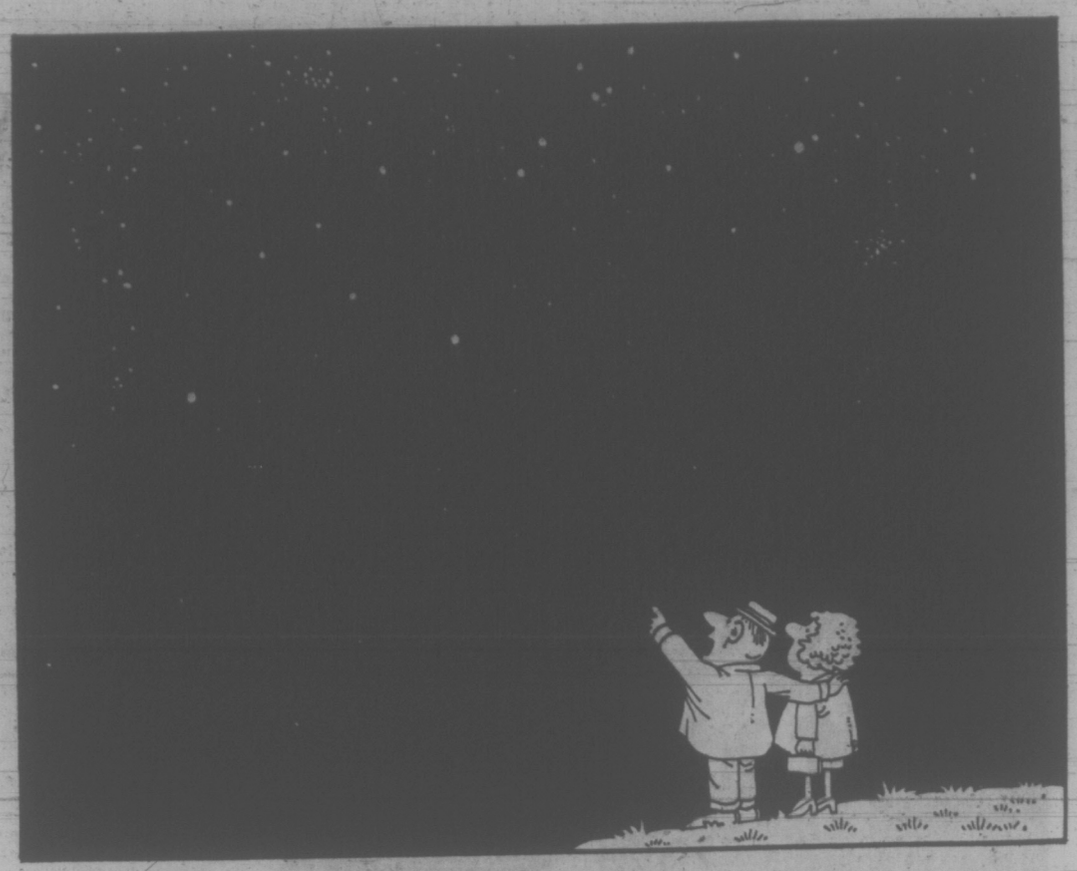
Certainly these periodic efforts to patch the system are not good enough for world trade today. The forthcoming discussions between governments should be sharpened by the United States action and the conditions which forced it. Certainly there will be dissatisfaction in Bonn and Tokyo. The struggle to export must be eased by adequate machinery to facilitate trade without periodic head-on bumps.

St. Paul's

Quite apart from any religious significance, the report that sufficient funds have been raised to assure preservation of St. Paul's Cathedral indefinitely breathes a measure of hope into the affairs of materialistic humanity. This great architectural triumph, the domed landmark of the London skyline, represents a spirit of achievement and greatness to men of different denominations.

St. Paul's went through the blitz, suffered and was repaired. St. Paul's has been threatened by the vibration of heavy traffic, has been exposed to the deterioration of time and atmospheric pollution. Corrosion has occurred and leadwork has become defective.

Now, thanks to a fund of about $7 million, mainly from British donors but also from Canada and the United States and other sources, the magnificent building will survive. The human race appears a little better as a result.



"... there it is ... just past the Big Dipper and the North Star ... our cost of living ..."

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Capital Punishment

I had no desire to become involved in the current controversy, having already communicated my views (which are in any case of no interest to the general public) to the Member of Parliament for Victoria.

However, I am greatly disturbed by those who persist in inserting an emotional note into what should be a dispassionate discussion, by identifying capital punishment with "hanging." It is doubtful if very many of the large number of Canadians who consider capital punishment necessary and justified would wish to retain this antiquated method.

I therefore strongly protest your insertion into Major Crofton's letter in your Feb. 5 issue of an artist's nightmare of a "hanging". Such satirical lampoons only serve to stifle a free expression of opinion on the part of your readers. Possibly this is what is intended, and the freedom claimed by the press should not extend to the general public?—N. T. Porter, 245 Linden.

(Editor's note: Hangings in Canada are not photographed. It was therefore necessary to use a Baghdad photograph to illustrate the letter. It was no lampoon, but very real.)

Mr. Munro

Mr. Munro, MP for Esquimalt-Saanich, would do well to reconsider what he said in the House.

Surely his statements re crimes of all kinds during a debate on the important subject of capital punishment, only serve to further inflame the attitudes of those who believe in vengence and an "eye for an eye" philosphy. It is also obvious that he is trying to shape the thinking of those who are not committed to his attitudes.

To state that: "Our women folk can no longer go out in the evening to post a letter," as something he has heard in this constituency, either suggests that he does not know this area, or he chooses to accept such a generalizing statement as fact. I suspect that both my assumptions are close to the truth.

He states that people in his constituency want among other things: "... tighter disciplinary controls on those who refuse to accept the laws of society." Lumping this statement into the discussion is a veiled suggestion that his constituents want the death penalty returned.

His questionnaire could not have done a better job of appealing to the Retentionist to support him, but has no appeal, nor is it any help to anyone struggling with what should be a deep consideration of the subject.

The lack of questions such as "Do you want to abolish capital punishment?", and "Do you want to extend the present system as is?", makes it obvious that he is not prepared to consider these opinions from his constituents. For all he knows, the majority would be contrary to his thinking.

Let us hope that the people of this area will still make up their own minds and tell him their decision.—Ken Pattison, 1572 Brodick Crescent.

A "Reid by Any Name . . ."

Well, I've just seen a sneak preview of our latest apartment-hotel harbor complex (old Bapco Paint site).

Salesmanship is a marvellous tool. Take an adverse situation — namely, public awareness and resistance; offer to let the public in before the plans are set and you convert this debit to a profit.

C.I.L., subsidiary of I.C.I. (Imperial Chemical Industry), ain't giving anything away for free. There's a lot of money in it.

Our harbor will be graced now not by one white wedding cake but by two. Reid on one side and sugar on the other. A fitting entrance to the age of crass commercialism. Miami left — Honolulu right. The corporation generously gives the public a walk-way around the hotel. Reclaimed harbor land!

But money must have its way. The land value with controlled zoning is probably worth $1.50 per sq. ft. Five acres equals $320,000. Rezoned hotel-apartment $10.00 sq. ft. equals $2,150,000. No doubt when C.I.L. purchased Bapco eight years ago they calculated the fixed assets carefully, but they can only become the shareholders' profits if the city gives it to them.

I offer a substitute idea. Let the land find its true value, $320,000. Have the provincial government and city of Victoria purchase the property. Then develop it for a much needed convention centre, setting aside a broad park-like border a la Dallas Road around the water perimeter.

What a wonderful luxurious entrance to Victoria, an emerald woodsy flower-girt park.

Oh, by the way, the sudden news of Bapco's departure was no real surprise. These hotel plans must have been in the works for several years! — Monte Vanton, 157 Barkley Terrace.

Vicious Circle

I would rather see today's society influenced by the Jack Scotts than by a political leader whose attitude seems no more enlightened than that of the lynch mob. No lynch mob ever performed except in the name of justice or the stemming of murder — their claim being that the courts were too permissive or too slow for the tastes of self-elected avengers.

I can absolutely refute the charges of those who appear to be ga-ga for the gallows that my attitude is based on emotionalism or some fey penchant for compassion—look at society and see the breeding ground for what it is; a veritable school for criminals. I am just as repulsed and horrified by heinous acts as are those who see a quick and easy answer in more killing, and perhaps more so as the vicious circle promises to get more vicious.

As for the charge that anyone opposing the use of the death penalty as a social retaliation, lacks concern for the victims of crimes—how ridiculous! I don't imagine all would-be "legal killers" having a good time at a "necktie party"—or am I wrong again?

Society must change for the better. We cannot exercise our ills by the spilling of blood; where in history has it been a success? — Mrs. E. L. Bailey, 728 Haliburton Rd.

Retribution

The picture you printed with Mr. Crofton's letter re capital punishment Feb. 5 is an insult to an honest man's opinion.

Speaking for myself I believe that if I were a murderer I would expect to hang by the neck until I was dead under a properly enforced government law. But not in the horrific manner your picture illustrates. Given a properly arranged hangman's knot and noose a long drop and a free fall I would not suffer much.

Further, I believe that I could assist at the demise of certain elements — child killers, cop killers and heroin peddlers — with as little and perhaps less compunction than thousands of B.C. sportsmen (so called) have when they go out and kill the innocent creatures of forest and stream who have done them no harm.—C. Smith, P.O. Box 91, Sooke.

Less Gore

Re: Robert Brow, Feb. 3, page 5 article.

A man who speaks out for capital punishment should not do so under the cloak of Christ. Shame on the writer. Christ's main theme was "Love one another for such is the law of the Kingdom."

If the churches were to follow Christ a little more and the Pharisees a little less we would have more understanding and less gore.

When I was a child I used to wonder at a chieftain who said "I don't mind to die, God, but please don't put me in Heaven with all those Christians." The missionaries had ordered the people to burn their chief at the stake because he was insulted by the missionaries' proffered beads and baubles and perturbed by their motives.—Grace Carey, 140 Superior St.

Questions

Is there a dog catcher in Victoria West? If so, why are seven to eight dogs running loose on Pine Street?—J. Wagstaffe, 711 Pine St.

Comfort

If more toilets will improve public health, why do not the provincial and municipal governments provide more? How many public comfort stations are there in Victoria? Is it fair to charge all the cost of providing more of them to business, especially to small business?

The lower cost restaurant makes health and happiness possible for the O.A.P.s, the lower income group. Will not the crushing of those eating places within reach of the poor increase malnutrition, hardship and unemployment?—Georgina G. Harrison 27-2296 Henry Avenue, Sidney.

Dream

Please excuse me that I write this letter. Because from long time ago I hope to marry with a Canadian blonde hair girl. It is my dream so I decided to write this letter.

I am 30 years old and graduated university law department. And now, I am an administrative official but I hope to become a lawyer.

I hope you help me for my dream. I am a very serious man and I hope that this letter will not be in vain.

Please you'll help me Sir! —Kiyoshi Kano, 1.784 Nagatsuka, Shibukawa, Gunma-Ken 377, Japan.

60 YEARS AGO

From The Times of Feb. 13, 1913:

WASHINGTON — President Taft prepared today to send marines to Mexico City after receiving reports on the shooting of two American women. A Mexican federal battery of artillery opened fire this morning but the rebels continued resistance. Ambassador Wilson's attempt to stop hostilities was approved by the administration, although some army men believed that there will be less bloodshed and a speedy termination of the rebellion if the combatants are allowed to fight it out.

BRUCE HUTCHISON

The Answer Is Terrifying

If the reader is like the present writer (which God forbid) he seldom looks at television. Still, he should watch, on Sunday afternoons, an excellent program entitled Question Period and accurately entitled because it is mostly brutal questions and no understandable answers. But the famous politicians who skilfully evade the questions about Canada's vital business, as asked by the skilled interviewers, unconsciously pose a much larger question and the answer is quite terrifying.

It is terrifying, I mean, to find, week after week, that the same politician appears on the screen under various names, with various party labels to say the same thing in various accents. Or, more likely, he says nothing at all if he can help it.

The watcher gets the uneasy feeling that there is only one member of Parliament, a single presence in Ottawa, a Small Daddy who governs the nation singlehanded. Each Sunday the man in front of the camera wears the identical haircut and sideburns, the identical suit made by the identical tailor, the identical pancake make-up applied by the identical expert and the identical smile rehearsed before the common mirror in the dressing room. Still worse, if you believe in democratic debate even the talk is almost identical.

Clearly, nothing has been left to chance. The pugilist has practised his footwork and knows how to weave and dodge in the ring. The salesman has studied his sales pitch. The actor has memorized his lines and non-answers.

How will they affect the grim voters in the Maritimes, the cranky voters in Quebec and the crazy voters out West? How will they sound to Ma and Pa in Moose Jaw? Is my tie gaudy enough to suit the young swingers and not too gaudy to offend the old squares? Are my pants well pressed and the fashionable length of shirt cuff exposed? How am I doing, folks?

In fact he's doing all right but it's harder than you think. Only a brave man would dare to confront Bruce Phillips, the able inquisitor-in-chief, who rarely glances at the prisoner or the camera but gazes off into remote vistas of horror and endless corridors of depravity as if he beheld sights too ghastly for public view.

I don't know Mr. Phillips, but he must be, in his acting role at any rate, the most sinister personage to stride across the world stage since the late Grigori Rasputin. Obviously he knows that the prisoner has not stopped beating his wife and robbing the children's piggy bank but, being a gentleman, doesn't mention these facts. He just leers and the leer chills your blood.

The blood of the single politician in Ottawa is not so easily chilled. He has trained himself to grin at the face of disaster. He flits though the mine-field of questions with a built-in Geiger counter. Oh sure, there may be a spot of trouble in Canada but it's not worth worrying about. No problem is beyond the genius of the government, or the opposition, and you can choose between them without risk either way. I'm O.K., you're O.K., the nation is O.K. or soon will be, with a little painless tinkering.

In Parliament or on the hustings the politicians quarrel bitterly, but not on television where all men become brothers in one big happy family so long as the camera rolls. It is proper to quarrel throughout the week but never on Sunday.

DAVID LEWIS
... where are the tumbrils?

David Lewis, for example, can be pretty obnoxious outside the studio. Inside, he grins the common grin, speaks in the common light-hearted tone and makes his socialist revolution sound like a jolly lark, a picnic in the Gatineau woods at no cost to anyone.

What has happened, you wonder, to the angry rebel, the sea-green incorruptible sansculotte, Canada's native Robespierre? Where are the tumbrils and the guillotine? Not in the studio anyway. Why, the televised Lewis turns out to be a simple, kindly old fellow, the family's beloved uncle, who often takes some poor corporate welfare bum to lunch.

Recently the single collective psyche and id of politics appeared in a new incarnation named Alastair Gillespie and, without knowing him, I would judge that the minister of trade will command a great future. Perhaps John Turner, the Liberal heir-apparent, should watch this competitor.

Mr. Gillespie has everything it takes to succeed — the lean, handsome face, neither too old nor too young; the folksy manner and colloquial idiom with a nuance of modest scholarship to intrigue the groundlings; the air of sweet reasonableness but, in the background, an aura of ruthless power when needed.

Clearly, such a man can solve any problem. Foreign investment? That will be quickly straightened out by passing a non-controversial statute. The stubborn trade negotiations with the United States? Not to worry. The Americans will come around to treat us like good neighbors. The Trudeau government has changed its whole policy to suit Mr. Lewis? No, of course not. The government's mind has simply evolved and clarified with experience. If the universe is unfolding rather differently than expected before last October 30, and now exactly according to the views of the NDP, that is a mere coincidence. Yes, we should all watch Mr. Gillespie.

Televised Politics

However, the first man to watch is Robert Stanfield and he, too, has been learning his televised politics. He has learned enough, at least, to let the interviewers stumble over their own questions while the fixed half-hour runs out and the only question of importance is asked too late.

What would Mr. Stanfield do about inflated prices when he proposes to inflate the entire monetary apparatus? At that moment the light dims, the program ends on a split second, as it must. Otherwise we would miss a commercial message concerning the virtues of soap or toothpaste and that is a disaster which no economic system can afford.

Mr. Stanfield, the artful dodger, has escaped again and the frustrated interviewers presumably go out and cut their throats. Don't waste your sympathy. They'll be back next week in perfect health. Their cameras and sound recorders, unlike the obsolete, printed word, will miss nothing, except the answers you are waiting for.

After the televised, homogenized, denatured democracy of Sunday, a different set of men will appear on Monday and conduct a different kind of democracy in Parliament. What a relief, then, to realize, as if you were waking from a nightmare, that Ottawa is inhabited by more than one universal personality, that many actual human beings, of flesh and blood, live and work and struggle beyond the ghostly electronic shadows! Maybe democracy can survive in spite of television. Never mind, the shadows look great to Ma and Pa in Moose Jaw. Their boy in the nation's capital is doing fine.

Some Lessons From the War

By JACQUES FAUVET
Le Monde

The first Indo-China war — France's war, or at least the war of those governments which got into it without realising what it was, and continued to stay in it without conviction — was fought successively in the name of colonial reconquest, denial of genuine independence, and finally the defence of the free world at its Asian periphery. Some people even had the gall to evoke the defence of Christian civilisation, the civilisation to which Auschwitz, Dachau, Dresden, and Hiroshima had only a little while before borne such glowing testimony.

That war, that "lousy war," could produce only the opposite of what was intended: half of Vietnam and Laos was left to the Communists and the rest to the Americans. Was that really worth the sacrifice of tens of thousands of French and African soldiers, tens of thousands of Indo-Chinese civilians and combatants, and the equivalent of 30,000 million francs?

It remains to be seen whether the second war, born of the establishment of Communist power in the North and the gradual replacement of France's financial, political, and ultimately military presence by the U.S., will achieve a measure of success where the first so signally failed. That is, whether it will save the South from Communism and ensure its genuine independence. It is in fact a more hazardous bet in peacetime than in war. But even if the wager is won, we can still ask whether it was worth the sacrifice of 50,000 young black and white Americans, 1.5 million Vietnamese soldiers and civilians — men, women and children — in both North and South.

The accord is far too new to gauge its effects and repercussions. But the war has gone on too long not to draw certain lessons from it.

Aside from the far Left, world opinion has for the most part displayed complicity or indifference. And it is true that its interest in the affairs of the planet is in inverse proportion to the distance of the event, and the colour of the people involved. A man injured next door is of more concern than a thousand deaths in any faraway place.

With the exception of France, the Common Market countries could come up with no better policy than blind support of the United States. They will doubtless begin to take an interest in Vietnam whenever it develops into a promising market. The EEC, divided and mercantile in spirit, was worse than faltering: it was non-existent.

And what of the impotence of such moral forces as the United Nations, or the spiritual force of the Vatican? They were never listened to, even on the occasions when they did get around to raising their voices. As for the omnipotence of the Super Powers, it was enough that they began to talk to one another, and then to their allies, for a way out of the crisis to emerge.

For these Powers international morality boils down to using other countries, in war as in peace. And there is little doubt that the lesson is valid for the Middle East today — and Europe tomorrow. If the next moves and eventual conferences only confirm the territorial and political status quo, peace may emerge with advantage. But people will most certainly lose the right to do as they please with their destinies.

The first Indo-China war was an ideological and military testing ground for Africa and particularly Algeria. It was a double test: African non-commissioned officers learned what a struggle for independence could be, and the French officers, both in combat and in captivity, read — inadequately — excerpts from Mao's writings.

The second Indo-China war was a more cruel and shameful testing ground still: for America's modern arms, for its blindly destructive giant bombers, and for the refinements of defoliation. Here was another Spanish civil war which, like the first, should have been of some interest to Europeans.

It was a more felicitous testing ground perhaps for the Super Powers whose pressure, hopefully, was as instrumental as the bombs in wringing concessions from both North and South.

And it could be a testing ground for peaceful and humane international cooperation if with the end of hostilities a conference were called to help rebuild Vietnam's countless ruins and bind its unspeakable wound.

WEAK ECONOMY, INDIFFERENT POLITICS

Morocco: Where Third World Begins

By RICHARD STACEY
New Statesman

RABAT — In the streets of Rabat, limbless beggars sprawl against shop windows which display the latest Sony micro-televisions. Morocco is a country undergoing what American political scientists call "progressive underdevelopment."

The population is increasing at a faster rate — currently 3½ per cent per annum — than any other country in the world: 15 million now, it will have doubled by 1984. Nearly three-quarters of the population are peasants, and their annual income (about one-sixth of the country's as a whole) decreases by 3 per cent per year.

For all the French sophistication of the city centres, Morocco is a very fragmented, ungainly country whose political indifference helps to mask its economic deficiencies. It is where the Third World begins.

It is also one of the few surviving authentically absolute monarchies. King Hassan II is the last in line of a 1,000-year-old dynasty; he is an Alaouit, a direct descendent of the Prophet himself. Nothing which he says or does can be wrong, from permitting the torture of imprisoned "Maoist" leaders to personal involvement in the corruption which is the very life-blood of his regime.

The economy of the country is based upon three foundations: phosphates (of which it is the world's largest exporter); agricultural produce (primarily citrus fruits); and tourism. With a bizarre combination of American machinery and Russian technical advice, the phosphates industry continues to prosper.

Aid Pours In

Likewise the citrus fruits: you cannot pass a street corner in any major city without seeing cartloads of oranges and strawberries for sale at knockdown prices — despite vast exports, there is still over-production.

Suggestions that the land would be better employed in producing, for example, wheat — last year, despite a "bumper crop," the country still had to import 500,000 tons from the United States — are not well received at the Ministry of Commerce.

"You don't understand the country," the Minister explains. "It is a problem above all of development." No doubt.

As the economy deteriorates, so more and more foreign aid — primarily American and French — pours in.

HASSAN
. . . power absolute

Private industrial enterprises are dominated by foreigners. But this does not bother the local haute bourgeoisie. In, or out, of the government, there are plenty of pickings for them. The Arab tradition of 'gift-giving' is easily adaptable.

Morocco is also valuable to the United States strategically. What the Americans call "a small technical military program strictly for defence purposes" includes a naval air station, two naval communications centres, a NASA electronic surveillance centre, and strategic radar facilities.

The French for their part fear either a "Greek" or a "Libyan" element infiltrating the Moroccan army which they once contentedly dominated, both in spirit and in personnel. So they have recently stepped up their supply of open and secret advisers to the royalist forces.

The utter and unchallengeable authority of the King means that Moroccan politics are little more than a game; and are almost openly recognised as such. The relative freedom of the press is a sign of the King's confidence rather than anything else. The game is not a subtle one; but the King plays it well, which is not surprising, since he makes up the rules, if necessary as he goes along.

Of the three elements involved in Moroccan politics — the army, the political parties, and the King himself — the first two are shuffled around by the latter as he sees fit. In the early Sixties, the young King promised a reformed, constitutional government, with a freely elected parliament, organised political parties, freedom of speech and action.

'Murderous Tax'

The disarray of his so-called 'Opposition', and the political ignorance of the mass of the voters, allowed him to get away with it. He received an overwhelming "Yes" in a referendum granting him practically unlimited prerogatives.

In the years following, increasing agitation — fomented, among other things, by events in Algeria, and by an absolutely murderous tax on sugar, part of the average Moroccan's staple diet — plus the emergence of some sort of properly organized opposition, Ben Barka's UNFP (National Union of Popular Forces), induced the King to apply the brake. In July 1965 he dissolved his so-called "Constituent Assembly;" within five months more, Ben Barka had "disappeared."

Leaving what was left of the parties to their own fumbling devices, the King returned to the army and the security forces to ensure that his policies were enforced. In time, a section of the army itself grew restive, a restiveness culminating in the incredible attempt to besiege the King and his entire governmental entourage in the Skhirat summer palace, during the now notorious birthday celebrations of 10 July 1971. That coup failed; the King relied on his Chief of Staff, Oufkir, to see that it did not happen again. Nor did it.

Officers 'Retired'

The next attack, equally extraordinary and equally unsuccessful, came from the air.

Unsurprisingly, Hassan has had enough of the armed forces for the time being. A large number of senior officers have been "retired" and their passports taken from them. Others have been dispatched to distant local commands. All heavy armament, and the bulk of the small arms ammunition has been collected into half-a-dozen heavily guarded security areas. From the army, then, back to the political parties, and the old talk of elections, constituent assemblies: the old game.

The two major parties, the UNFP and the Istiqlal (Independence Party) have been invited to join a reorganised government under the King, following proposed elections within the next two months. But there is little fire in either. As for the Istiqlal, the party which supposedly "led Morocco to independence," it is scarcely more dynamic.

Empty Promises

"Democracy is on holiday," says its leader, the smiling, white-haired Ali Al Fassi, staring dreamily out of his office window at the blue Moroccan sky. It doesn't seem to bother him very much.

That is precisely what is the matter with Moroccan politics: indifference. It is an indifference born out of the knowledge that only the King has the power of political action. At the same time it contributes to that power, so that Hassan is able to promise all and do nothing. He can offer royal land to poor peasants with "25 years to pay" and then have them imprisoned, and their land confiscated, for not abiding by the contract which they could not read.

He can increase the educational budget by 25 per cent, and then imprison 50 university students without trial at the first signs of "agitation" against their conditions. He can authorize the setting up of contraceptive clinics, and then insist fervently in the royal prayer every Friday, over the ubiquitous transistor, that the commands of the Prophet be obeyed on pain of eternal punishment — which means that Muslim women are rarely if ever seen inside any of the clinics.

'Masses' Unaware

The students talk of the "masses;" the army talks (more discreetly now) of the "masses;" the political parties talk of the "masses;" the King and his shuffleboard government talk of the "masses." The "masses" remain unconcerned. They are not aware of this collective identity so glibly assigned to them. They continue to pick the strawberries and to work the phosphate and to hold out their hands for tourist bakshish.

For the present, at least, the King holds all the cards. Even a truly aimed assassin's bullet would not guarantee that the stagnant pool of Moroccan politics would be much disturbed. There are too many vested interests determined to maintain the status-quo. And those interests are very powerful ones indeed.

The Ways of Down Under

By EDWARD REYNOLDS
The London Observer

AUCKLAND — While Britons and Icelanders were getting hot and bothered over their "cod war" a more gentle fishing skirmish was running its course in a small port near the northern tip of New Zealand.

A few days after New Zealand had closed down for its three-week Christmas-in-the-sun holiday some fishermen noticed a junk-like craft near the northern-most cape of the country. Some of the Taiwanese crew were ashore picknicking by a fire. Others were diving in shorts and vests for pauas, a shellfish like the Channel Island ormer and the Californian abalone.

The junk's master later told a New Zealand magistrate that the fishermen gave them two bottles of beer and showed them were they could find bigger pauas. Less friendly fishermen reported the junk to the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries.

With everyone on holiday and because the New Zealand Navy's 30-year-old fishery protection boats can reach only nine knots, five days passed before they fell upon the motor junk (which had a maximum speed of four knots) and escorted it to the port of Whangarei. Here the junkmaster was charged with using a foreign ship to fish in New Zealand waters.

While an interpreter was being found the junk crew were looked after on board another fishery protection boat while their junk, the Ming Poh, was fumigated to prevent any fleas hopping ashore and bringing foot-and-mouth diseases to New Zealand animals.

Newspapers found interpreters before the court could and discovered that the junkmaster, Tan Kim-kiang, was on a voyage of exploration for his ship's owners seeking new sources of pauas. A friend had told him that pauas were there for the taking in New Zealand, and here he was.

Tan, aged, 46, married, the father of four, a man with no assets and earning £15 a month, was fined £500. The junk was forfeited to the Crown.

The law put the government in a pickle. Obviously the Ming Poh men could not raise £500 and the government had no use for either 15 bewildered Chinese or for a tatty motor junk in need of engine repairs.

On top of that New Zealand had just recognized Peking, the Taiwan Ambassador had pulled down his flag and left for home and so, officially, New Zealand could not talk things over with the Chiang Kai-shek regime. But the matter began to settle itself.

Within a day, citizens of Whangarei raised over £200 to help to pay the fine. A Chinese greengrocer in the town supplied the crew with marrows, lettuce and cucumbers. Passing commercial fishermen handed fish over to to the crew. The court interpreter sent back his fee to the Justice Department on condition that the money should be spend to help provision the Ming Poh.

The next day the fund rose again and the government said it would release the junk on being assured the government expenses of £350 were met.

On the following day a pineapple importer who had enjoyed doing business with Taiwan offered to make up the remainder of the £500 fine. Public subscriptions rose to £350 and Taiwanese officials still packing up in Wellington announced that Taiwan would pay half the fine, buy 3,000 gallons of fuel, pay for engine repairs and be responsible for New Zealand government expenses.

By then farmers were employing the crew on haymaking to let them buy more provisions, citizens were bringing more food and the grateful Chinese had found a New Zealand Red Ensign and were flying it as a courtesy flag.

So, last week, debt-free, repaired and provisioned with gifts, the Ming Poh sailed home with stories of the inscrutable ways of a country where, if you are fined, the citizens chip in and pay for you.

New Zealanders who want foreigners to keep their paua-picking hands where they belong have one consolation. When the crew get home no one will believe them.

The Traumatic Crime That Women Suffer

By KENNETH BAGNELL
The Globe and Mail

A few years ago a friend of mine was called to the telephone and listened to the most terrified voice he has ever heard. A girl, a rather nervous person to begin with, had been attacked in her room.

She came from Europe with few friends and no relatives and had been living alone in a boarding house. She opened her eyes one morning to see a man climbing in her window. He grabbed her, she screamed and he ran, but left memories that won't go away.

"We got her to move in with us," my friend was saying the other day, "and it must have been three weeks before she got up enough nerve to think about looking for a place of her own."

I was thinking of that incident one night recently, watching Bill Moyers, a man of intelligent humanism, interviewing on television a number of women who had been raped. He made the point, the first time I'd seen it made with such clarity, that the woman who is raped or attacked, suffers at a number of levels most of us never realize.

There's the assault itself, always traumatic and maybe physically brutal. But that's only the beginning. For if she reports it, the investigation and trial, if it comes to that, may be far worse than the original experience.

★ ★ ★

Any psychiatrist will tell you why. A defense lawyer, if he is utterly shrewd, may exploit her trauma by hinting she consented. Immediately, she is doubly punished. First it was rape, now they're telling her she went along. So, even if the accused is sentenced, she'll always carry a measure of guilt, for the lawyer — and God knows who else — figures she went along.

The suggestion of Moyer's program was clear: women who are raped feel guilt calling for new consideration by the police and the rest of us.

In most large cities, rape is on the increase, sometimes at an ominous rate. In New York, it's up 38 per cent over 1971. In Toronto it's nothing like that but it's rising and in 1972 there were 180 students reported. Some policemen estimate that maybe three times that number go unreported, especially with the increase in female hitchhiking.

In a number of cities the police and the people have fresh sensitivity to this problem and Toronto can learn from them. In New York, women who report they've been raped are not interviewed by male detectives but female. In Toronto, for the most part it's still men who knock on the door and ask the detailed questions.

Some policemen may be suited to this delicate role, but a lot aren't. If we want to extend the community's concern to rape victims, we should begin by urging that more women be promoted to the rank of detective and assigned to this special task.

An increase in rape is a sign of decrease in community. It occurs mostly in large, lonely places where women are surrounded by human beings but are still alone. Someone may live next door but that does not matter. It may be revealing that many assaults take place near apartments. There are, after all, no neighbors sitting on the verandah or talking over the fence.

To some, this all seems so removed as to be almost irrelevant. That could be a measure of how much we care for the women in Toronto whose memories are burdened with something they can't forget.

FUSION SOLUTION?

By DEV MURARKA

MOSCOW — A Soviet scientist claims that the world's main pollution problems will be solved by the development of thermonuclear energy. A thermonuclear reactor, he says, will be producing electrical energy by 1985 or earlier, and at the end of the century it will have become the commonest form of power station.

Beyond that, the scientist, I. Golovin, forecasts that man will discover ways to use solar energy to such an extent that the world's power problems will be solved for good.

Writing in the government newspaper, Izvestia, Golovin contends that by the end of the century nobody will build normal coal or oil fired power stations. Instead he envisages that conventional fission reactors burning Uranium 235 will play the main role in supplying energy. At the same time construction of breeder reactors, which convert Uranium 238 into Plutonium 239, and do it faster than they consume the fuel, will have become widespread. He sees this progress as the inevitable step towards the next goal, obtaining controlled thermonuclear reaction.

So far it has not been possible to use hydrogen bomb energy for peaceful purposes. Golovin argues confidently, however, that in the foreseeable future we may count on a fusion reactor — using the power of the hydrogen bomb to generate electric power. For fuel it would use deuterium and isotypes of hydrogen, both of which are available in large quantities at low prices.

Golovin contends that thermonuclear reactors do not involve the emission of any combustion wastes into the atmosphere or into rivers. Moreover, by its very nature the fusion reaction rules out the possibility of a nuclear accident. Therefore, it is safer, and Golovin believes that thermonuclear reactors can be built in the centres of cities and communities where their waste heat can also be used for industrial and domestic needs.

The Russian forecasts that in the next century thermonuclear stations will compete successfully with nuclear stations, and later push them out.

Eventually, however, the thermonuclear power station will themselves give way to solar energy. Then neither air pollution, nor the exhaustion of fuel resources will threaten earthmen. It is a vision which should cheer up those worried about an ecological disaster.

Youths Free Hostages From Tavern Hold-Up

DALLAS, Tex. (AP) — Two teen-age gunmen, surrounded by nearly 100 police officers throughout the night, surrendered today about an hour after releasing the last of 22 hostages they took more than eight hours earlier.

The ordeal began when the two, one of them an escapee from a mental hospital, were trapped during the attempted robbery of a bar in northeast Dallas. They surrendered at 8:46 a.m., peeping around the door and then easing out of the bar.

They released the last six hostages at 7:25 a.m. after a police detective told them: "I give you my word we are not going to raid the place."

Before the surrender, authorities had said they were waiting for the arrival of the father of one of the boys, Milton Allen Frank, 18, who was en route from Las Vegas to talk to his son.

During the course of the night, the boys had demanded a car with a tankful of gas and a plane to make a getaway.

Police said the trouble began at 10 p.m. Monday when the pair, reported armed with a sub-machine-gun, a pistol and a shotgun, burst into the Inner Circle bar and demanded money. A customer slipped out while the robbery was in progress and telephoned police.

When police arrived, they said the youths threatened to shoot the hostages.

Police detective Paul McCaghren kept up a marathon conversation with the two through the evening and early morning.

Frank was identified as an escapee from the state mental hospital at Terrell. His companion was identified as Robert Gordon, 17. Both are from Dallas.

Nearly 100 policemen, many of them wearing bullet-proof vests and carrying shotguns, had surrounded the bar during the siege.

When police first arrived at the lounge the two gunmen blocked the doors with pool tables and herded customers into a corner. Frank then shouted at officers that he would start shooting the hostages if police moved in.

Police brought Frank's wife of seven months to the bar to try to persuade him to surrender. She talked to him for several minutes, but said later the talk "did not do any good."

Grants For Festivals

OTTAWA (CP) — Increased grants to two of Canada's biggest summer theatre festivals were announced Monday to the Canada Council.

The Stratford Shakespearean Festival at Stratford, Ont., will receive $460,000 for its summer season this year and to assist it in sending the Stratford National Theatre company to other parts of Canada.

Stratford's grant for these purposes last year was $410,000.

The council also announced an increase in its grant to the Charlottetown Summer Festival at Charlottetown to $170,000 for 1973 from $157,000 in 1972.

EDUCATIONAL MENU EXPANDS

The "educational menu" in Victoria's high schools was extended Monday night with the addition of two locally developed courses — Aviation II and Linguistics II.

"They're offered, not so students can eat more but so they will have a greater choice," school board chairman Peter Bunn explained at a committee meeting which recommended approval of the courses.

The new studies come under recent department of education policy which allows accredited secondary schools to create their own local courses.

Esquimalt senior secondary proposes an aviation course to be open to one class of 30 to begin with, at an initial one-year cost to the school board of $30.75 per pupil and an $18 fee to be paid by each student.

The course proposes to introduce students to all facets of aviation and prepare them to write government private pilots license exams.

They would study 15 different aspects of aviation including principles of flight, aircraft and engine operation, weather and basic meteorology, flight planning and aviation history.

Frank Hinch, who will teach the course at Esquimalt high, holds both power and glider pilots licences and has had many years of instructional experience with the military.

"I think the course will be good," said Trustee Walter Donald, "because an enormous number of young girls want to be stewardesses and it would be interesting to see their disillusionment when they meet these people and find out stewardesses fly to London and come back in the same underwear."

The other new course, Linguistics II, is proposed for Victoria senior secondary, and trustees expressed pleasure with the addition of this subject into the high school curriculum.

"It's about time we had this," Trustee Philip Ney said. "It's amazing we haven't had it sooner."

Trustee Hal Knight said he felt it was important for students to have this knowledge before studying more intricate English courses.

The course proposes to introduce students to the scientific study of languages, to examine how the English language developed and to analyze phonology, grammar and semantics.

It will then take this basic knowledge and apply it to the practical realm by examining languages and cultures in B.C., both Indian and non-Indian.

Donald said he endorsed the course, which needs final board approval and permission of the department of education, but added:

"God help the parents when their kid comes home and says—Dad, can you help me with my linguistics?"

L.I.P. CLEARS KNOCKAN TRAIL

Trail-cutting to the crest of Knockan Hill has been completed to create the first public access to the previously undeveloped park overlooking Portage Inlet.

The natural wood noted for its rocky outcrops, promontories, spring flowers and comparative isolation from nearby agricultural and housing development, may now be reached from the 1200 block of Burnside West.

Saanich parks department planned and supervised the project under provision of the Local Initiatives Program. It is one of four L.I.P. undertakings being carried out by Saanich parksmen.

The same crew which did Knockan Hill brushcutting started this week on extension of the waterfront trail in Gorge Park and others are employed in the construction of toilets and dressingrooms at Rudd and Horner parks, and the completion of Lambrick Park pavilion.

In addition, work has started on planting, path-building and restoring landscaping on the Colquitz River waterway, also via L.I.P. but under direction of design engineer Frank Neate.

About 20 men are working and a total of 29 are expected to be employed under the January-May program. L.I.P. participation requires projects to end by May 31.

No Change Seen In Tourism Aid

Removal of spending conditions for municipal per capita grants is expected to have little impact on Vancouver Island tourist promotion and in the case of Saanich the grant may pass unscathed.

The provincial budget speech Friday gave municipalities a free hand in the spending of per capita grants which up to now they had been required to direct to tourist promotion and ambulance services.

But because the previous legislation had no compulsion, only one municipality in Greater Victoria was putting a significant amount into tourism while the others spent the bulk of the grant on ambulance service.

A tourist industry spokesman was reluctant to speculate on attitudes of municipalities now able to decide for themselves how to spend the entire grant. He noted that annual municipal budget deliberations are in the offing and did not want to jeopardize the chances of grants to the operations of Vancouver Island Publicity Bureau.

The tourist spokesman said only the city of Victoria donated a full $1 per capita to bureau operations, while Oak Bay, Saanich and Esquimalt gave nominal amounts.

He noted the provincial Contributory Grants Fund continues to provide $1.50 for each $1 contributed by municipalities through the bureau for external tourist promotion work, up to $59,000 total on Vancouver Island.

In the case of Saanich, which contributes $5,000 to the bureau, Mayor Hugh Curtis said: "I can only conjecture, but the Saanich grant this year probably will remain the same as in past years because we still have a fresh expression of opinion on the matter by citizens."

He referred to a December 1971 referendum seeking opinion on whether electors favored increasing their contribution to Victoria Visitors Bureau and Vancouver Island Publicity Bureau. A total 7,387 voted no, 2,890 said yes and 152 ballots were rejected.

Curtis said this would "spare the bleatings of Victoria Visitors Bureau that we must give them the equivalent of $1 per capita."

Land Grant Hit

ROCKY MOUNTAIN HOUSE, ALTA. (CP) — The district chamber of commerce objects to a government grant of 1,200 acres of "prime land" to the Wesley Indian band.

The protest was in a letter addressed to premier Peter Lougheed, J. A. Adair, minister responsible for northern development, opposition members and Joseph Clark, Progressive Conservative MP for Rocky Mountain.

The chamber said the grant — on the Kooteney plains in the foothills west of Red Deer — is a "prime tourist area" and granting of the land to the band will interfere with use by other Albertans.

Race Bias Cited In Regina Rents

REGINA (CP) — Several cases of discrimination by white landlords against native people were cited Monday during a meeting called to discuss the lack of proper accommodation for native people in the city.

Caroline Goodwill, a family worker, told of cases in which landlords raised rents on learning a native family received social assistance.

Realtors sympathized but said the housing shortage was "a matter of economics" and their business was to rent on behalf of landlords.

EDMONTON (CP) — Provincial funds totalling $816,513 were released Monday for emergency payments to farmers who lost crops because of bad weather this fall, the government announced.

Pay Hiked

EDMONTON (CP) — Plumbers and pipefitters in northern Alberta have voted to accept a new three-year contract offering a $2-an-hour increase in basic wages. It brings their hourly rate to $7.95.

Color TV Cash

REGINA (CP) — A $439,000 program to provide color television recording and playback equipment in Saskatchewan schools was announced today by Education Minister Gordon Macmurchy.

Strike Vote

CALGARY (CP) — A strike vote by teachers in rural southern Alberta could be held as early as Feb. 26, 27, 28, negotiator Bill Casanova said Monday.

About 27,000 elementary and secondary students in 18 school districts would be affected in a strike that could occur as early as March 5.

GETTING THE MESSAGE OVER

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta's practice of suspending irresponsible motorists for 30 days is obviously "getting the message across to 90 per cent of them that their driving habits must improve," Highways Minister Clarence Copithorne said Monday.

"The effectiveness is reflected in the fact that only 13 per cent of suspended drivers were subjected to a second suspension and six per cent were subjected to a third suspension," he said in a statement.

Abortions Increase

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — The Centre of Disease Control has reported that more than 480,000 legal abortions were reported by 24 states and Washington, D.C., in 1971. Figures for 1972 are unavailable. The abortion rate in the United States increased to 136 per 1,000 live births in 1971 from 48 per 1,000 live births in 1970.

Wheat Kings' Chaff Barbed Amidst Moos

LANG

HAMILTON
... 'Tory visionary'

OTTAWA (CP) — When "the crown prince of Saskatchewan" stood Monday to face the former wheat king there wasn't a red-faced man in the Commons who wasn't suddenly a westerner.

The showdown between Otto Lang, minister responsible for the wheat board, and Alvin Hamilton (PC—Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain), a former Conservative agriculture minister, flared unexpectedly from a routine debate on a bill to give the Trudeau government an extra $1.29 billion in spending money.

Both men represent Saskatchewan ridings.

The items in the bill were discussed at length last week. Most western MPs remained silent through the debate on funds for winter works and other programs.

The Monday argument turned on an amount set aside for assistance to Peace River, Alta., farmers who lost crops under early snows.

Within a short while the entire House was shouting itself hoarse over barley and wheat as Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Lang tossed barbs across the Commons floor.

DEBATE GETS NOISY

Mr. Hamilton, pounding his desk so hard he winced, shouted: "This government has hit the farmer so hard it'll take years to recover."

A chorus of hoots greeted him from the Liberal benches. The Trudeau government policy of grain quotas has "betrayed the farmer and the hungry people of world," Mr. Hamilton called above the roar filling the House.

Liberal fists thumped in unison on wooden desks as Mr. Lang rose. "Mr. Hamilton is the visionary in the Tory party," he said, looking around at his colleagues.

"He is the one who after a thing has happened can see it clearly."

When the laughter subsided Mr. Lang launched into a recitation of Trudeau government of wheat and barley sales.

"This year's a new record, record prices," he called as his colleagues thumped support.

"I don't care how many bushels you sell there's no money in the farmer's pocket," Mr. Hamilton salvoed back.

The tumult of pounding fists and moo-ing calls from both sides of the House continued as Mr. Hamilton sought to regain attention, straining to be heard above the noise.

The Liberals, he said, will have to seek their next leader outside Quebec and Ontario.

"When the crown prince of Saskatchewan moves in, God help the Liberal party," he called, provoking a fresh wave of roars.

Mr. Lang, his desk piled high with binders, retired into his papers.

The debate settled into its normal tread and members filed away to the lobbies for a rest.

LEADERS BATTLE

A different but equally vociferous confrontation occurred earlier in the day between the leaders of the New Democrats and the Conservatives.

Twice NDP Leader David Lewis called on the leader of the official Opposition to specify to what level his party would increase old-age pensions. Twice Robert Stanfield fended off the question.

The tone of verbal exchanges between them escalated during the weekend when Mr. Stanfield spoke of an NDP organ-grinder turning the tune for a Liberal monkey. He was referring to NDP support in the House for the Liberal government.

Mr. Lewis stood up against catcalls and boos from the Conservatives Monday to tell them he was "sick and tired of their phony superiority throughout this Parliament."

The Conservatives, he said, claim to support the government's proposed $300-million three-year winter works program and other items in the supplementary estimates bill, yet "three days of time were wasted arguing against them."

"I don't like the Liberals," he shouted, "but I don't like the Conservatives any more."

Democracy Buried in Uruguay

By LEWIS H. DIUGUID
Washington Post

MONTEVIDEO — Uruguayan democracy, which died last Thursday at the hands of the armed forces, was formally interred Monday with the signing of a pact whereby the military will co-govern with the civilian president.

President Juan Bordaberry thus maintained his office, mainly because the military wished to avoid a complete takeover while imposing their own program.

LITTLE SUPPORT

Bordaberry, 44, received little substantial support from his own party, and the opposition was demanding his resignation. Nor was support manifested for the democratic institutions themselves.

Thus, while radio and TV stations taken over by the armed forces announced the agreement with Bordaberry as a "constitutional solution," Uruguay was slipping quietly from the list of operative democracies in South America.

Only Chile, Colombia, Venezuela and Guyana among the 12 nations maintain constitutional rule.

Political parties here could turn out thousands during the election campaign of 1971. Students repeatedly filled the streets to protest any perceived infringement of civil rights on the part of the government.

But the only crowd that showed up to protest the usurpation of power by the armed forces consisted of perhaps 400 people who gathered Thursday night at Independence Plaza.

They shouted a bit in front of the presidential palace and departed. Since then, the beaches along the riverside drive that borders the city have been full, but the streets empty.

At the residence to which Bordaberry retired on Friday, his aides kept asking that a crowd gather to support him.

But the only turnout was from the president's family, including eight children, and newsmen.

Perhaps the great irony came in the receptivity accorded the military incursion by the Broad Front, the coalition somewhat similar to that of President Salvador Allende in Chile.

The Broad Front includes the Communists, Socialist and Christian Democratic parties.

Last year, when the army took over the battle against the Tupamaro revolutionary guerrillas, the front protested implacably against the accompanying suspension of constitutional guarantees.

Many of its own people were victims of the police-army repression.

When the military used powers voted by Congress to close leftwing dailies, the Front stood firm for constitutional rights.

CHOICE

But in the current crisis, the Front — forced to choose between the duly-elected Bordaberry and the armed forces — opted for the military.

Retired Gen. Liber Seregni, leader of the Front, called for the resignation of Bordaberry. In an interview, he declared that he actually opposed entry of the military into government, but that the incapacity of recent governments made it impossible.

Seregni favored an interim government and new elections, but accepted as inevitable a large and continuing role for the military in any case.

He and other members of the Front feel that the military's program could cure Uruguay's ills.

They also profess confidence that a so-called "Peruvian" element will dominate the services and carry out the reforms that all have called for at times but that somehow never seem to be applied: elimination of the foreign debt, increased employment, agrarian reform, decentralization of industry, incentives for export, prosecution of the corrupt in government and business.

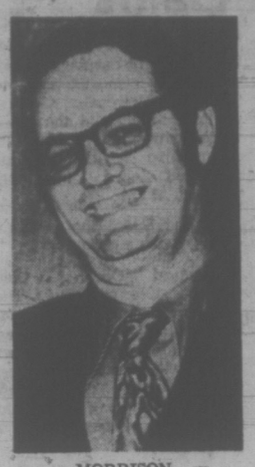
Socred Raps 'Tinker Toy' Budget



MORRISON
. . . hostile climate

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

The provincial budget was termed a "tinker toy budget" by Victoria Social Credit MLA Newell Morrison in the Legislature Monday.

Opening the budget debate for the official Opposition, Morrison said the NDP budget does nothing to deal with B.C.'s acute unemployment problem, creates the most hostile business climate in Canada and raises cabinet ministers' salaries in an "irresponsible" way.

Morrison charged that the 20 per cent increase in corporation tax — from 10 to 12 per cent — was not necessary to balance the budget, and predicted that the tax on companies' utilized capital will have a "disastrous" effect on the province's job-creating capacity.

"These two measures taken together will give British Columbia the most hostile business climate in Canada, especially when the minister of finance (Premier Barrett) shows accounts which prove beyond a shadow of doubt that the tax increase represents political need and not fiscal need," he said.

DEVIOUS METHOD

Morrison said the corporations will only pass the cost on to the consumer, who will end up paying more for every commodity and therefore be the victim of "a devious method of tax collection." The burden would fall most heavily on those least able to pay, the low and middle income groups.

He said one of the things the budget should have contained was an assurance of lower income tax for thousands of British Columbians, through increased exemptions for the provincial share of income tax.

The budget should also have eliminated municipalities' 15 per cent share of welfare costs and replaced it with a program guaranteeing a minimum annual income for all residents of the province.

INSULT TO INJURY

Referring to the government's intention to increase the rural property tax mill rate, Morrison said that coming on top of the freeze on subdivision of farmland adds insult to injury for the farmer, who isn't even told how much more he is going to be paying in taxes.

All farmers had been given in return was "the sop of reduced gas tax for the family truck."

Morrison said Barrett had termed the budget a "people's budget" but the real beneficiaries though increased salaries were the cabinet ministers, and the "recipients of executive posts in this patronage-riddled government."

The salary increases, he said, appear to be about 20 per cent but on the basis of two legislative sessions a year and two sessional indemnities the real increase, in the case of the premier's salary, is almost 60 per cent.

UP TO $48,000

If there were two full sessions the premier's salary could be as high as $52,000, plus $15,000 expenses, while cabinet ministers would receive up to $48,000 plus $7,000 expenses.

"I tell you, Mr. Speaker, if this socialist NDP government were to go to the people today with these irresponsible demands, the people would say 'No.'"

Conservative house leader Scott Wallace said despite the "rather gentle attitude" shown by Barrett in his first budget, it appears that "he has taken the first step down the road which leads to ever-increasing state control of business and industry, which is the hallmark of socialism."

Wallace said the idea of taxing the corporations even more heavily appeals to many people, who apparently fail to recognize that this is in the long term a blow at both the investor and the consumer.

CHANGE EXPECTED

There are signs that other similar measures will follow, he said, adding: "We have a leftist socialist government in this province and the posture of the premier as a moderate democratic socialist is not the posture we can expect in the future."

On specific budget points, Wallace said far from increasing any taxes, corporate or otherwise, the government should be reducing taxation to place more money in the hands of the consumer, whose higher spending would create jobs.

He said the increased corporation tax and the tax on utilized capital would have a punitive effect on small businessmen making modest profits, and the budget should have contained some exemptions for them.

The increased royalty on petroleum could lead to higher prices to the consumer as well as decreased exploration at a time when oil is becoming an increasingly vital commodity.

Wallace said the government is obviously considering ways of extracting more revenue from the province's natural resources, and this creates a general atmosphere of uncertainty in the business world. As a result, companies might curtail their development programs which could otherwise be creating new jobs.

Referring to the budget speech statement that the NDP government favors partnership arrangements between industry and government, rather than subsidies or loans to industry, Wallace said the record of the socialist government of Saskatchewan in that respect was "one long miserable tale of disaster."

He gave several examples of government-backed enterprises in that province up to 1961 which had failed, one of the main reasons being that persons were appointed to boards for their political value rather than because of their practical business experience or know-how.

Wallace said the Conservatives believe in incentives to assist industries become established and self-sustaining, but the operation of those industries must be free of political interference and bureaucracy.

CABINET CAN'T AGREE

The provincial government has not acted to remove educational taxes from property because the cabinet has not been able to agree on the method of removal, Premier Barrett said Monday.

Barrett told reporters outside the house that the move has been party policy for some time but that the cabinet could not decide which of a number of alternative methods to use. As a result, the matter has been referred to the NDP caucus for its opinion, he said.

Barrett said all the alternative methods involve a phase-in period of four or five years. Education Minister Eileen Dailly said shortly after the NDP's election victory that it would be a five-year program.

The premier would not elaborate on the methods being considered to remove educational tax from property. But he said it will be at least until the fall session of the legislature, and possibly until next spring, before the government makes its move.

Barrett referred to the matter in Friday's budget speech, saying "a method of removal of the school tax from the homeowner is currently under review."

Gov't Accused Of 'Shell Game'

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

Pat McGeer (L — Vancouver-Point Grey) accused Premier Barrett in the legislature Monday of playing "the old shell game" by underestimating provincial revenue in the same manner formerly employed by W.A.C. Bennett when he was premier.

McGeer was proposing the fifth annual Liberal party budget, a practice initiated when Social Credit was in power. McGeer's budget this year was for a total of $1,850 billion, about $130 million more than the one brought in by Barrett Friday. And McGeer said his budget would be balanced, and would produce a surplus at the end of the fiscal year.

The former Liberal leader told the house his party will oppose Barrett's budget when the vote comes. The main reason, he said, is because the premier has continued the old Social Credit practice of funelling tax revenues into the province's crown corporations without actually saying so in the budget speech.

"No one can tell me we have frank and open disclosure in the budget when this is going on," McGeer said. "It's the old shell game. The budgets of this province will remain a sham as long as this continues. More than a quarter of a billion dollars of public funds is being kept out of sight."

Among McGeer's proposals is a call for the government to put $15 million into establishment of a provincial merchant marine. This could be done he said, by utilizing an already-existing federal subsidy of 19 per cent for any ships built in the province.

The ships could be ordered built immediately, he said, and the government could make it a requirement of resource exports that the government ships be given first refusal on out-of-province shipments.

Lift Taxes on Farm Land

McGeer also proposed an extra expenditure of $10 million to remove property taxes from all producing agricultural land in the province. In this way, he said, working the land would be more profitable for the farmer, encouraging him to stay on his land and reduce food prices. A negative tax on land which would provide a bonus to the farmer could also be considered, he said.

An additional $25 million could be spent on providing a comprehensive program of chronic care, McGeer said. Unemployed people could be trained by the government to work with the chronically-ill and the elderly. In many cases, he said, all that some of these people require is an occasional visit or someone to do a small job.

A further $20 million could go to the department of education for the development of the province's universities, McGeer said. Development of new industry is tied to higher education, he said, adding that he had never been able to convince former premier Bennett of this and hoped that Barrett could be convinced more easily.

McGeer said the resources department could do with an additional $10 million so that more field staff could be hired to seek out cases of damage to the environment, pollution abatement equipment could be encouraged by tax incentives and grants and a thermo-electric plant could be built to burn up waste wood accumulated on the province's beaches.

Five million dollars could go to promotion of B.C. as a winter playground, the Liberal said. Tourism is one industry which is clean, job-producing and lucrative, he said, adding that people don't realize that B.C. is better to visit than Switzerland or Colorado.

The province should make a strong bid to bring the 1980 Winter Olympics to B.C., he said, because the television exposure connected with the Games would go a long way towards boosting the tourist industry.

McGeer said B.C. is 25 years behind Eastern Canada in terms of production of sophisticated machinery and Eastern Canada is 25 years behind the rest of the world. An additional $20 million should be set aside for encouragement of industrial development. This could be done partially through annual $25,000 awards to the British Columbian with the best invention of the year and to the manufacturer who does the best job of marketing and producing a B.C. invention.

College Study Slated

Dr. Ian McTaggart-Cowan of the University of British Columbia will chair a committee to study Selkirk College and Notre Dame University, Education Minister Eileen Dailly said Monday.

The committee, which will report to her on the respective roles of the two institutions at Castlegar and Nelson, respectively, in providing post-secondary education for the Kootenay region, also includes:

Elizabeth Wallach, a high school teacher in the Nelson school district and a government appointee on the Selkirk College council;

Judge Leo Ganser of Nelson and a former member of the NDU advisory board;

Two additional members recommended by the committee after its first meeting. Mrs. Dailly said the committee's final terms of reference will be worked out later between her and its members.

Healing Substance... Shrinks Piles, Checks Itch

Exclusive healing substance proven to shrink hemorrhoids...and repair damaged tissue.

A renowned research institute has found a unique healing substance with the ability to shrink hemorrhoids painlessly. It relieves itching and discomfort in minutes and speeds up healing of the injured, inflamed tissues.

One hemorrhoidal case history after another reported "very striking improvement." Pain was promptly and gently relieved . . . actual reduction or retraction (shrinking) took place.

And most important—this improvement was maintained in cases where clinical observations were continued over a period of many months. Furthermore, these tests and observations were made on patients with a wide variety of hemorrhoidal conditions. All this was accomplished with a healing substance (Bio-Dyne) which quickly helps heal injured cells and stimulates growth of new tissue. Bio-Dyne is offered in ointment and suppository form called Preparation H.

In addition to actually shrinking hemorrhoids, Preparation H lubricates and makes elimination less painful. It helps prevent infection which is a stated cause of hemorrhoids.

Just ask your druggist for Preparation H Suppositories or Preparation H Ointment (with a special applicator).

Last year, when the army took over the battle against the Tupamaro revolutionary guerrillas, the front protested implacably against the accompanying suspension of constitutional guarantees.

Many of its own people were victims of the police-army repression.

When the military used powers voted by Congress to close leftwing dailies, the Front stood firm for constitutional rights.

CHOICE

But in the current crisis, the Front — forced to choose between the duly-elected Bordaberry and the armed forces — opted for the military.

Retired Gen. Liber Seregni, leader of the Front, called for the resignation of Bordaberry. In an interview, he declared that he actually opposed entry of the military into government, but that the incapacity of recent governments made it impossible.

Seregni favored an interim government and new elections, but accepted as inevitable a large and continuing role for the military in any case.

He and other members of the Front feel that the military's program could cure Uruguay's ills.

They also profess confidence that a so-called "Peruvian" element will dominate the services and carry out the reforms that all have called for at times but that somehow never seem to be applied: elimination of the foreign debt, increased employment, agrarian reform, decentralization of industry, incentives for export, prosecution of the corrupt in government and business.

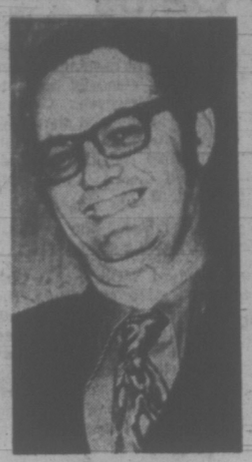
Socred Raps 'Tinker Toy' Budget



MORRISON
. . . hostile climate

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

The provincial budget was termed a "tinker toy budget" by Victoria Social Credit MLA Newell Morrison in the Legislature Monday.

Opening the budget debate for the official Opposition, Morrison said the NDP budget does nothing to deal with B.C.'s acute unemployment problem, creates the most hostile business climate in Canada and raises cabinet ministers' salaries in an "irresponsible" way.

Morrison charged that the 20 per cent increase in corporation tax — from 10 to 12 per cent — was not necessary to balance the budget, and predicted that the tax on companies' utilized capital will have a "disastrous" effect on the province's job-creating capacity.

"These two measures taken together will give British Columbia the most hostile business climate in Canada, especially when the minister of finance (Premier Barrett) shows accounts which prove beyond a shadow of doubt that the tax increase represents political need and not fiscal need," he said.

DEVIOUS METHOD

Morrison said the corporations will only pass the cost on to the consumer, who will end up paying more for every commodity and therefore be the victim of "a devious method of tax collection." The burden would fall most heavily on those least able to pay, the low and middle income groups.

He said one of the things the budget should have contained was an assurance of lower income tax for thousands of British Columbians, through increased exemptions for the provincial share of income tax.

The budget should also have eliminated municipalities' 15 per cent share of welfare costs and replaced it with a program guaranteeing a minimum annual income for all residents of the province.

INSULT TO INJURY

Referring to the government's intention to increase the rural property tax mill rate, Morrison said that coming on top of the freeze on subdivision of farmland adds insult to injury for the farmer, who isn't even told how much more he is going to be paying in taxes.

All farmers had been given in return was "the sop of reduced gas tax for the family truck."

Morrison said Barrett had termed the budget a "people's budget," but the real beneficiaries though increased salaries were the cabinet ministers, and the "recipients of executive posts in this patronage-riddled government."

The salary increases, he said, appear to be about 20 per cent but on the basis of two legislative sessions a year and two sessional indemnities the real increase, in the case of the premier's salary, is almost 60 per cent.

UP TO $48,000

If there were two full sessions the premier's salary could be as high as $52,000, plus $15,000 expenses, while cabinet ministers would receive up to $48,000 plus $7,000 expenses.

"I tell you, Mr. Speaker, if this socialist NDP government were to go to the people today with these irresponsible demands, the people would say 'No.' "

Conservative house leader Scott Wallace said despite the "rather gentle attitude" shown by Barrett in his first budget, it appears that "he has taken the first step down the road which leads to ever-increasing state control of business and industry, which is the hallmark of socialism."

Wallace said the idea of taxing the corporations even more heavily appeals to many people, who apparently fail to recognize that this is in the long term a blow at both the investor and the consumer.

CHANGE EXPECTED

There are signs that other similar measures will follow, he said, adding' "We have a leftist socialist government in this province and the posture of the premier as a moderate democratic socialist is not the posture we can expect in the future."

On specific budget points, Wallace said far from increasing any taxes, corporate or otherwise, the government should be reducing taxation to place more money in the hands of the consumer, whose higher spending would create jobs.

He said the increased corporation tax and the tax on utilized capital would have a punitive effect on small businessmen making modest profits, and the budget should have contained some exemptions for them.

The increased royalty on petroleum could lead to higher prices to the consumer as well as decreased exploration at a time when oil is becoming an increasingly vital commodity.

Wallace said the government is obviously considering ways of extracting more revenue from the province's natural resources, and this creates a general atmosphere of uncertainty in the business world. As a result, companies might curtail their development programs which could otherwise be creating new jobs.

Referring to the budget speech statement that the NDP government favors partnership arrangements between industry and government, rather than subsidies or loans to industry, Wallace said the record of the socialist government of Saskatchewan in that respect was "one long miserable tale of disaster."

He gave several examples of government-backed enterprises in that province up to 1961 which had failed, one of the main reasons being that persons were appointed to boards for their political value rather than because of their practical business experience or know-how.

Wallace said the Conservatives believe in incentives to assist industries become established and self-sustaining, but the operation of those industries must be free of political interference and bureaucracy.

CABINET CAN'T AGREE

The provincial government has not acted to remove educational taxes from property because the cabinet has not been able to agree on the method of removal, Premier Barrett said Monday.

Barrett told reporters outside the house that the move has been party policy for some time but that the cabinet could not decide which of a number of alternative methods to use. As a result, the matter has been referred to the NDP caucus for its opinion, he said.

Barrett said all the alternative methods involve a phase-in period of four or five years. Education Minister Eileen Dailly said shortly after the NDP's election victory that it would be a five-year program.

The premier would not elaborate on the methods being considered to remove educational tax from property. But he said it will be at least until the fall session of the legislature, and possibly until next spring, before the government makes its move.

Barrett referred to the matter in Friday's budget speech, saying "a method of removal of the school tax from the homeowner is currently under review."

Gov't Accused Of 'Shell Game'

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

Pat McGeer (L — Vancouver-Point Grey) accused Premier Barrett in the legislature Monday of playing "the old shell game" by underestimating provincial revenue in the same manner formerly employed by W.A.C. Bennett when he was premier.

McGeer was proposing the fifth annual Liberal party budget, a practice initiated when Social Credit was in power. McGeer's budget this year was for a total of $1,850 billion, about $130 million more than the one brought in by Barrett Friday. And McGeer said his budget would be balanced, and would produce a surplus at the end of the fiscal year.

The former Liberal leader told the house his party will oppose Barrett's budget when the vote comes. The main reason, he said, is because the premier has continued the old Social Credit practice of funelling tax revenues into the province's crown corporations without actually saying so in the budget speech.

"No one can tell me we have frank and open disclosure in the budget when this is going on," McGeer said. "It's the old shell game. The budgets of this province will remain a sham as long as this continues. More than a quarter of a billion dollars of public funds is being kept out of sight."

Among McGeer's proposals is a call for the government to put $15 million into establishment of a provincial merchant marine. This could be done, he said, by utilizing an already-existing federal subsidy of 19 per cent for any ships built in the province.

The ships could be ordered built immediately, he said, and the government could make it a requirement of resource exports that the government ships be given first refusal on out-of-province shipments.

Lift Taxes on Farm Land

McGeer also proposed an extra expenditure of $10 million to remove property taxes from all producing agricultural land in the province. In this way, he said, working the land would be more profitable for the farmer, encouraging him to stay on his land and reduce food prices. A negative tax on land which would provide a bonus to the farmer could also be considered, he said.

An additional $25 million could be spent on providing a comprehensive program of chronic care, McGeer said. Unemployed people could be trained by the government to work with the chronically-ill and the elderly. In many cases, he said, all that some of these people require is an occasional visit or someone to do a small job.

A further $20 million could go to the department of education for the development of the province's universities, McGeer said. Development of new industry is tied to higher education, he said, adding that he had never been able to convince former premier Bennett of this and hoped that Barrett could be convinced more easily.

McGeer said the resources department could do with an additional $10 million so that more field staff could be hired to seek out cases of damage to the environment, pollution abatement equipment could be encouraged by tax incentives and grants and a thermo-electric plant could be built to burn up waste wood accumulated on the province's beaches.

Five million dollars could go to promotion of B.C. as a winter playground, the Liberal said. Tourism is one industry which is clean, job-producing and lucrative, he said, adding that people don't realize that B.C. is better to visit than Switzerland or Colorado.

The province should make a strong bid to bring the 1980 Winter Olympics to B.C., he said, because the television exposure connected with the Games would go a long way towards boosting the tourist industry.

McGeer said B.C. is 25 years behind Eastern Canada in terms of production of sophisticated machinery and Eastern Canada is 25 years behind the rest of the world. An additional $20 million should be set aside for encouragement of industrial development. This could be done partially through annual $25,000 awards to the British Columbian with the best invention of the year and to the manufacturer who does the best job of marketing and producing a B.C. invention.

College Study Slated

Dr. Ian McTaggart-Cowan of the University of British Columbia will chair a committee to study Selkirk College and Notre Dame University, Education Minister Eileen Dailly said Monday.

The committee, which will report to her on the respective roles of the two institutions at Castlegar and Nelson, respectively, in providing post-secondary education for the Kootenay region, also includes:

Elizabeth Wallach, a high school teacher in the Nelson school district and a government appointee on the Selkirk College council;

Judge Leo Ganser of Nelson and a former member of the NDU advisory board;

Two additional members recommended by the committee after its first meeting. Mrs. Dailly said the committee's final terms of reference will be worked out later between her and its members.

Healing Substance... Shrinks Piles, Checks Itch

Exclusive healing substance proven to shrink hemorrhoids... and repair damaged tissue.

A renowned research institute has found a unique healing substance with the ability to shrink hemorrhoids painlessly. It relieves itching and discomfort in minutes and speeds up healing of the injured, inflamed tissues.

One hemorrhoidal case history after another reported "very striking improvement." Pain was promptly and gently relieved . . . actual reduction or retraction (shrinking) took place.

And most important—this improvement was maintained in cases where clinical observations were continued over a period of many months. Furthermore, these tests and observations were made on patients with a wide variety of hemorrhoidal conditions. All this was accomplished with a healing substance (Bio-Dyne) which quickly helps heal injured cells and stimulates growth of new tissue. Bio-Dyne is offered in ointment and suppository form called Preparation H.

In addition to actually shrinking hemorrhoids, Preparation H lubricates and makes elimination less painful. It helps prevent infection which is a stated cause of hemorrhoids.

Just ask your druggist for Preparation H Suppositories or Preparation H Ointment (with a special applicator).

Satisfaction or your money refunded.

Lornex

Lornex Mining Corp. Ltd. reports that its preliminary unaudited results to Dec. 31, covering the first three months of operation, show a net loss of $1,215,000 or 15 cents a share. Net revenue from production was $8,947,000.

Production of copper concentrate for the three months totalled 20.9 million payable pounds with 581,000 payable pounds of molybdenum contained in concentrate.

In the pre-production period, prior to the official start on Oct. 1, production was 19 million pounds of copper and 73,000 pounds of molybdenum. Revenue from this production has been credited to the capital cost of the project.

Progress toward the design rate of 38,000 tons a day has been slower than expected, primarily because of mechanical considerations, the company said. However, the rate has been improving steadily. During the three-month period it averaged 30,998 tons a day.

Nowsco

Nowsco Well Service Ltd. reports net earnings for 1972 were $831,482 or 82 cents a share compared with the 1971 figures of $531,178 or 64 cents a share.

Royalty Change Criticized

CALGARY (CP) — The doubling of oil royalties by the British Columbia government is unprecendented and was done "in the face of existing legislation which provides that no change will be made in the royalty rate before 1975," the Canadian Petroleum Association said Monday.

Board chairman A. M. McIntosh of the CPA's B.C. division said the association believes the change in regulations will be detrimental to the province by discouraging industry.

The new royalties will average about 20 per cent, or double the current average of 15 per cent. Maximum royalty will be 40 per cent compared with the current 16 2-3 per cent.

McIntosh, in a prepared statement, said for many producing properties the increase will triple royalty rates.

McIntosh said 1971 statistics show the provincial government received 60 cents for every $1 of production revenue through royalties, lease rentals and crown sale bonuses.

A Big Sigh of Relief

By Al Forrest
Times Business Editor

The market responded positively to Premier Barrett's budget on Monday, but not strongly.

MacMillan Bloedel rose $1 to $29 on 600 shares on the Vancouver Stock Exchange and a similar increase on 8,705 shares was recorded in Toronto.

B.C. Forest Products was up $1 to $31¼ in Toronto on 600 shares but there was little VSE trading in the stock.

On Saturday Vancouver investment dealers predicted the market would respond favorably to the first budget of the New Democratic Party because of its generally mild tone.

Monday was the first day of trading since Premier Barrett unveiled his budget Friday afternoon.

While the market responded favorably, there was no enthusiasm evident and trading volume was light.

A Victoria investment dealer said the proper reading is that the business community is heaving a sigh of relief that taxes did not go higher.

"In some cases, stocks had already been discounted, assuming the corporation tax would go to 13 per cent. Some values were restored when it only went to 12 per cent."

The light trading indicates some concern about possible future actions by the NDP government.

In additon, B.C. companies are more concerned about the direction the federal government will take in its budget, due Monday afternoon.

The federal corporation tax in the 40 per cent to 50 per cent range is a much bigger factor in corporation planning than present provincial government moves.

In Toronto, investors are already buying or selling based upon their guesses as to what the federal budget will say.

Meanwhile, in New York American oil companies were still reeling from the unfavorable court decision on the Alaska pipeline.

Paper losses of more than $500 million were recorded Monday.

Atlantic Richfield led the decline, fallin 8⅞ to $68. It was selling in the 68-69 range on Wall Street today.

So many selling orders came in for Standard Oil of Ohio it did not open and there was no trading reported this morning.

Like Atlantic Richfield, Standard Oil owns property for a potential refinery at Cherry Point.

Standard Oil, Ohio, is expected to trade in the 80s when it opens, down $10 or more.

Other oil companies involved in the Alaska pipeline also suffered losses, despite a 12 point rise in the Dow Jones industrial average.

Alaska Interstate was off 2⅛ to $32 and Williams Pipeline Co. fell 3½ to $47¼.

Computer Cash Registers Reduce Account Errors

TORONTO (CP) — Computerised cash registers, still relatively new on the retail scene, are making cashiers' jobs simpler and, even more important, reducing the risk of human error.

The registers automatically record sales, produce a sales slip, keep track of inventory, calculate sales tax and record credit purchases on the customer's account immediately.

Such systems eliminate the time-consuming job of punching sales on a standard cash register. An "electronic wand" about the size of a large fountain pen is scanned over specially-coded price tags and the information is flashed on a screen located on the registers. If necessary, the register may be used manually.

Pitney-Bowes-Alex Inc. of Danbury, Conn., one of the first companies to introduce the new system, says that probably the most attractive feature "is improved customer service."

Horizon department stores, a subsidiary of the T. Eaton Co., was the first retail outlet in Canada to implement the system. Manager W. A. Kelly says so far the company is more than pleased.

For most companies, inventories and receivables constitute a major share of their assets and they are anxious to have an accurate and faster means of determining merchandise movement—either on order, being received, in the warehouse or on the selling floor. The inventory control feature of the new registers is one answer.

Fast information is another plus.

Store managers can at any time get flash reports on sales trends from any of the terminals throughout the store.

Optional features built into the system include the ability to make credit checks directly from the register — an effective means of preventing credit overspending.

Another option automatically retrieves a current price on any item programmed on the computer's file. This allows stores to run spot sales without changing price tags on each individual item.

NEW STAMPS FOR RCMP

OTTAWA (CP) — The post office will issue three new stamps March 9 to mark the 100th anniversary this year of the RCMP.

In a news release, the post office said the stamps will be printed in three denominations.

A three-color, eight-cent stamp will commemorate the force's 1874 trek to the western frontier; a 10-cent five-color issue will show, symbolically, the spectograph used in RCMP crime laboratories for identification purposes and a four-color, 15-cent stamp will feature the force's musical ride.

Retirement Plan Like Interest-Free Loan

By C. DAVID WEYMAN
Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co.

Everybody's ambition in life is to save income tax and everybody — well, nearly everybody — has a chance to do so.

The secret is to contribute to a retirement income plan but there are still people around who are not in on this.

The way it works is that the contributions made to the retirement income plan are deducted in calculating taxable income so that income taxes are saved now, and the retirement income is included in taxable income when it is received in the future.

This has two advantages. First, the retirement income may be taxed at a lower tax rate than current income is, because income levels tend to fall after retirement. But don't count on tax rates not increasing by then.

Secondly, and much more significant, a part of the investment in the retirement income plan is money which would otherwise be paid away as current income tax. So the government is making part of the annual contribution — it is like an interest-free loan.

There are two important kinds of plan which qualify for this favourable tax treatment—a registered pension plan and a registered retirement savings plan.

It was probably the tax advantages which at first led companies to have a registered pension plan. These advantages were and still are:

—The employer's contribution is not a taxable benefit to the employee.

—The employee's contribution is deductible by him in calculating taxable income.

A registered pension plan may be set up as non-contributory—the employer pays all—or it may require the employees to contribute and may even permit them to make voluntary contributions. Contributions normally relate to current services rendered by the employees but may also be made on account of past services.

Contributions in respect of current services must be withheld from the employees' salary or wages or paid as part of their union dues. Contributions on account of past services may be paid by the employees directly.

The tax reform increased the annual limit for tax deductible contributions to a registered pension plan from $1,500 to $2,500 per employee in respect of current services. Both the employer and employee are subject to this limit.

In addition, the employee can contribute a further $2,500 in a year in respect of services rendered by him in a previous year of employment with the company before he became a contributor to the pension plan. And if, under the old tax system, he contributed the maximum $1,500 for each year before he became a contributor to the plan, the new tax system permits this to be increased to $2,500.

By contrast, a registered retirement savings plan is a personal retirement income plan. Many people think that it is available only for the self-employed but this is wrong—employees can also save tax sometimes by contributing to an RRSP and so can those receiving rental income.

With the increase in the maximum tax deductible contribution under the tax reform to $4,000, an RRSP is now a very significant way to save income tax and provide for retirement. Those eligible are remiss if they pass up this opportunity.

And if money is borrowed to make the contribution, keep track of the interest paid because it can be deducted in calculating taxable income.

INCOME TAX SAVING

Earnings	Maximum RRSP Contribution	Out of Pocket Cost	Tax Saving
$5,000	$1,000	$766	$234
10,000	2,000	1,427	573
15,000	3,000	1,958	1,042
20,000	4,000	2,295	1,705
25,000	4,000	2,215	1,785
30,000	4,000	2,091	1,909

The annual contribution limits are:

—Self-employed and employees who do not belong to a registered pension plan—20% of earnings up to a maximum of $4,000;

—Employees who belong to a registered pension plan—20% of earnings up to a maximum of $2,500 for the employee's combined contributions to the registered pension plan and the RRSP.

The difference between the $4,000 and $2,500 limits reflects the fact that if an employee belongs to a registered pension plan, his employer is also contributing up to $2,500 a year to this plan on his account.

"Earnings" include salaries, wages, pension benefits, retiring allowances, business profits and net real estate rental income for the purpose of determining the maximum RRSP contribution.

To be deductible in your 1972 tax return, contributions to an RRSP must have been made during 1972 or within the first 60 days of 1973. The deadline is therefore March 1, 1973. If contributions made from January 1, 1973 to March 1, 1973 exceed the 1972 limit, the excess can be deducted in your 1973 tax return.

The accompanying chart shows how the maximum contribution to an RRSP increases to $4,000 for a self-employed person or an employee who does not belong to a registered pension plan.

The chart also shows how the tax saving increases as contributions and earnings increase or, putting it another way, how the out-of-pocket cost of contributing decreases relative to the total contribution.

The big question then is what kind of RRSP to buy and where to go to get one.

One kind of RRSP athat is available is offered by the life insurance companies and it involves registering the cash surrender value or savings portion of a life insurance policy.

Some life insurance policies are backed by what is called a segregated fund of equity investments. If the savings portion of one of these policies is registered, you will have a retirement savings plan with a value that will rise and fall with the fortunes of its investments.

Otherwise, you can make a direct payment to a registered retirement savings plan offered by a trust company, life insurance company, investment dealer or mutual fund.

These plans come with three options:

— Guaranteed plan — your contributions are guaranteed plus a reasonable interest rate There is no risk involved.

— Income plan — your contributions are invested in fixed-income investments such as bonds, mortgages and preferred shares to give you good security of capital and a high long-term interest rate.

— Equity plan — you contributions are invested in common shares to give long-term capital gains which will be a hedge against inflation. The value of this plan rises and falls with the stock market.

If they are going to buy into an equity plan, they may also compare investment management performance over perhaps the last five years. And, like any investor, they would try and time their contributions during the year when the stock market was down, perhaps borrowing the money to spread the cost.

Finally, if you own investments which qualify under the new regulations, you can contribute them at their current value to a self-administered RRSP. No cash outlay is involved but you still get the tax deduction. There is a question as to whether the transfer of the investments into the RRSP triggers capital gains and losses, but nobody knows for sure— not even the tax department.

Tungsten Discovered By Amex

VANCOUVER (CP) — Amax Exploration Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Amax (American Metals Climax Inc.) of New York, reports it has identified a huge tungsten deposit on the Yukon-Northwest Territories border about 240 miles northeast of Whitehorse.

Company officials said here the deposit is about five miles northwest of the Canol Road in the MacMillan Pass area. The company said more than 30 million tons of tungsten-bearing rock have been outlined with an average grade of 0.9 per cent tungsten trioxide.

Amex plans additional drilling and bulk sampling in an effort to determine true tonnage and grades.

SHORT SMOKE BREAK

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — The Minnesota senate decided by a 33-to-28 vote Monday to ban smoking in its chamber, effective immediately.

The rule was broken 19 minutes after it was adopted.

Senator Jerome Blatz lit up a cigarette and raised a conspicuous cloud over his front-row desk.

The smoking ban was proposed by Senator David Schaaf who said it was difficult sitting downwind from "Bonfire" Borden, Senator Winston Borden, a devotee of large, black cigars.

OPELOUSAS, La. (AP) — Thieves who broke into the Fabis Guillory residence here evidently didn't want to leave anyone behind to tell on them.

St. Landry Parish sheriff's deputies said burglars took more than $1,500 worth of loot — not counting the family's talking parrot.

TV Salesman Was Fast Talker, But When Will He Deliver?

FLINT, Mich. (AP) — A trusting 25-year-old Flint woman still is waiting for her bargain-priced television set.

Bernastine Connie told police she was standing in front of a furniture store when a man approached and offered to sell her a set for $75. She declined to buy but changed her mind when he lowered the price to $50."

He took her into the store, showed her the set and told her to drive to the back of the store to pick it up.

When she got there and gave him the $50, he told her: "Watch how fast I'll be back with the television."

That was Saturday.

TORONTO — An unknown, globe-trotting admirer has mailed Meryl Dunsmore of Toronto a Valentine card — for the 46th consecutive year.

This year's card, mailed from Amsterdam Feb. 7, was received by Mrs. Dunsmore Monday, signed as usual: "Your secret admirer."

Mrs. Dunsmore, a 61-year-old office supervisor, has been receiving the cards from all over the world every Valentine's Day since 1928 but has no idea who is sending them.

"It's nice to know he hasn't forgotten me," she said Monday night. "I really look forward to getting them."

ATHENS — The American pilot of the light aircraft in which the only son of the Greek shipping magnate, Aristotle Onassis, suffered fatal injuries Jan. 22 is being prosecuted for manslaughter.

The Athens prosecutor's office announced proceedings against 50-year-old Donald McCusker, pilot of the plane, which crashed at Athens Airport. Alexander Onassis, 24, was pronounced dead in hospital the next day.

McCusker remains in hospital but is reported to be out of danger. He is also being prosecuted for serious injuries suffered by his 58-year-old co-pilot, Donald MacGregor, a British-born Toronto resident.

LONDON — Mrs. Maureen Bingham tried to commit suicide after being sentenced to 30 months imprisonment for helping her husband spy for the Soviet Union, her defence attorney said today.

The suicide attempt at Holloway Prison was mentioned in a psychiatric report read by Sir Elewin Jones at a hearing called to rule on a request for a reduction in her sentence. The court refused to reduce it.

Her husband, David, was jailed for 21 years for espionage. She was convicted under similar charges in October after she told newsmen she had helped her husband.

ANNISTON, Ala.—Police officials reported that four unidentified city policemen were "innocent purchasers" of stolen cars.

Public safety director Bill Jones said four of six stolen cars were found in the possession of the policemen.

He said there is no disciplinary action planned against the four since "there's nothing to indicate they are anything but innocent purchasers."

WASHINGTON — Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W. Va., asked the defence department today to find out why non-combat causes took the lives of 10, 306 U.S. servicemen in Vietnam, including 2,229 who died from homicides or self-inflicted wounds.

Pentagon figures show that nearly one out of every five of the more than 55,000 deaths in the nearly 12 years that U.S. troops served in Vietnam was due to a "non-hostile" cause.

OTTAWA — Conservative Leader Robert Stanfield will receive in Montreal Wednesday the Emmanuel Brotherhood's clarion of peace award for "service to the cause of humanity and brotherhood."

Previous recipients include Premiers Robert Bourassa of Quebec and William Davis of Ontario and former prime minister John Diefenbaker.

WASHINGTON — Doctors at Walter Reed Army Medical Centre report Sen. John Stennis, shot twice in a street holdup two weeks ago, is showing "encouraging progress."

The condition of Stennis, 71, was changed Monday from "very serious" to "serious" and his prognosis from "guarded to fair." He sat up in a chair to watch television newscasts of returning prisoners of war.

Toronto in WHA?

TORONTO (CP) — Doug Michel, president of Ottawa Nationals of the World Hockey Association, said Monday night he expects a decision within the week on whether a WHA team will be relocated in Toronto next year.

Michel was commenting on reports from Ottawa that the Nats, owned by himself and Nick Trbovich of Buffalo, had been sold to Milwaukee interests; that Michel and Trbovich had purchased the New York Raiders franchise and were moving it to Toronto, and that Philadelphia Blazers would move to New York while retaining the same ownership.

"Sounds like musical franchises, doesn't it," Michel replied to the reports. "No, it's not true."

He said a $200,000 down payment on the Nats made by a Milwaukee group headed by Marvin Fischman would be forfeited to the Ottawa club if the Milwaukee bidders did not follow through with negotiations.

"I'm not going to say we're going to sell the team tomorrow, but I won't say we aren't going to sell within 100 years.

"As for Toronto," he continued, "we could have a team there in half an hour.

"We have the franchise rights for Ontario—first we were going to Hamilton, then Ottawa, and Toronto is right between."

He said the Nationals aren't looking for new owners, but Trbovich's business sells stocks to the public "so we have to listen to offers."

"We are interested in Toronto. We are thinking of Maple Leaf Gardens, but if they are too difficult about rent we would consider the Coliseum in the CNE. I hear it would seat about 8,000, which isn't adequate but at least would do for a start."

Michel said he had promised the "people in Ottawa" that something definite would be decided "within the next week, so that will settle the possibility of moving to Toronto, too."

Michel also denied reports the Nats were available to the Milwaukee group for $1.5 million.

"If there has been an amount mentioned, then the amount mentioned publicly is not the right one."

Some 'Good Things' That Didn't Pan Out

Fear not, even if Super-Pick has failed, Willie the Wonder will bail you out.

Super-Pick is by Super-Joe out of Harvard and is the latest in devices designed solely to help man beat the horses. It is a concentric selector, a $100 circular slide rule, which works.

How well? That is another question, the answer still to be determined. But the plan is new: It is based on the computer technique of regression analysis, and will, ultimately, the designers hope, help the purchasers make thousands on the ponies.

The new contraption is the result of five Harvard degrees, $50,000 of research, and 50 million digits of computer analyzed data being fed into it. There are 10 revolving discs, five on each side, numbers are marked in black and red, and the entire plastic gadget comes complete with operating instructions. And don't forget the hundred!

Super-Pick was designed by a Harvard student, who prefers to be known as The Wizard, and turns out to be the same Wizard of Odds who was featured in Look Magazine in 1971 in an article: Can a Computer Beat the Races?

The inference was that it could, and was, and that the Wizard was doing it.

Detailed Study of Major Tracks

It all began in 1970 when The Wizard purchased every known betting system on how to pick a "good thing", plus five years of back issues of the horseplayer's bible, The Racing Form. The Wizard concentrated on three main tracks, Aqueduct, Belmont and Saratoga, and compiled a detailed analysis over a 20-month period.

And what he found out is just what every handicapper knows, but wouldn't dare tell.

There are 117 factors that influence the result of a race:

There are 60 factors involved in the position of the horse at various calls, "the quarter, the half, the mile", in his last three races.

But when it comes to actual betting, there are basically only 11 factors that the horseplayer needs.

Seven concern position at those various "calls" in the last three races only; two deal with time interval between races, one uses average odds, and the other average weight.

Naturally, there was some concern that the selector could be dangerous to the fundamental structure of horse race betting.

So a test was made, under the auspices of the New York Times, and the Star Publishing Co., which markets the new device. The selections were made for three tracks, were figured on the slide-rule by The Wizard's brother, phoned to the publishing company, and then relayed to the Times.

A Paper Loss on a Test Run

Alas, either the selector or The Wizard's brother failed. Hopefully the latter. Because he was entertaining a girl friend at the time, and didn't realize the need for speed in making his selections. Besides, the girl friend's car was overparked and had to be moved. As a result, payoffs were not encouraging. There was a paper loss of $30.20 for $2 win bets on 51 horses.

A few days later, another test was conducted. Results weren't much better. There was a deficit of $111 on $2 win wagers on 159 horses. Actually, 11 of the top picks won, and 17 second choices got up in time. One day the selector picked four seconds and four thirds.

Of course this was only a test run, and not at the big tracks, and the Wizard probably never took mud into consideration either. And no, there will be no sale price before spring. But don't worry.

That's when Willie the Wonder will give you all the winners, all the winners worth having that is!

Because you see, I've gotten rid of my old $20 Pace Calculator, the Investors Dependable Earnings Accumulator, the pocket size Smart Money Detect-O-Meter, the Trainer's Overlay Profit System, and the Fifth Dimension Selector.

And you know what I've got?

Shhhh! It's "The Secret Four."

The Secret? It eliminates the irrational.

(P.S. Bring Money).

HOCKEY TIPS

By Bobby Orr

When play is in your end of the ice it is important to keep opponents from getting into position to score.

In the picture, I have tied up my man behind the net. I will keep him against the boards until either play is stopped or the puck has been cleared out of danger. The puck in this case is not frozen but clear and I am waiting for a teammate to move in.

In close games or when your team is playing shorthanded, it is important to slow down the play. One of the most effective methods is tying up a player on the boards.

Some of the best penalty killers in the National Hockey League can rag the puck for several seconds and when necessary, freeze the puck along the boards, forcing a faceoff.

Defensive moves such as this help win hockey games and championships. Every top club in the National Hockey League has penalty specialists.

Puck control is an important part of winning hockey. And board checks are an integral part of good defensive hockey. A player who is legally held along the boards will cause no trouble for your goalie.

Blazer Close To 50 Goals

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — Danny Lawson of Philadelphia Blazers is nearing a 50-goal season and New York's Ron Ward is closing in on the 100-point mark with seven weeks left in the World Hockey Association's first season.

Lawson scored twice last week for a league-leading 42 goals, WHA statistics released Monday show. Ward increased his first-place total to 88 on 39 goals and 49 assists.

New England's Tom Webster also tallied twice, raising his total goals to 40, second to Lawson.

Ward has a five-point edge over Andre Lacroix of Philadelphia and Terry Caffery of New England, who are tied for second with 83 points apiece. Webster is fourth with 79 points and Lawson fifth with 75.

J. C. Tremblay of Quebec is the WHA's top-scoring defenceman with 69 points, including a league high of 58 assists.

Cleveland goalie Gerry Cheevers has the lowest goals against average, 2.62, and the most shutouts, five.

In the only game played last night, Cleveland Crusaders increased their Eastern Division lead over New England Whalers to six points by beating New York Raiders 8-2 in Cleveland. Joe Hardy and Paul Andrea scored two goals each for Crusaders while Ron Buchanan, Dick Pumple, Jim Wiste and Gerry Pinder got one each. New York marksmen were Bill Speer and Ron Ward.

'Eyes' Have It With Bruin Vet

MONTREAL (CP) — John Bucyk, Boston Bruins' veteran left winger who led the National Hockey League in accuracy two seasons ago, was the leader again in the first half of this season and his eye has improved.

Statistics released by the NHL Monday show that among players with 15 or more goals, the 37-year-old Bucyk scored almost once in every four shots on opposition nets — 19 goals on 79 shots for 24 per cent accuracy.

When Bucyk led the league in 1970-71, he had 51 goals on 225 shots, a percentage of 22.6.

The annual mid-season review shows that 11 players had a scoring accuracy of 20 per cent or better, the largest number of players to have an average of a goal every five shots in any season.

Second to Bucyk was Gerry Meehan of Buffalo Sabres with 23 goals on 96 shots — 23.9 per cent.

Centre Dennis Hextall of Minnesota North Stars was close behind with 23.8 per cent on 15 goals and 63 shots; followed by Bob Berry of Los Angeles Kings — 21 goals, 92 shots and 22.8 per cent; Mike Walton of Boston — 21 goals, 96 shots, 21.8 per cent; Syl Apps of Pittsburgh Penguins — 19 goals, 92 shots, 20.6 per cent; and Mike Corrigan of Los Angeles — 18 goals, 87 shots and 20.6 per cent.

Gray Looks to Mexico

TORONTO (CP) — Clyde Gray, a 25-year-old Toronto bricklayer, Monday night hooked and jabbed his way to the British Commonwealth welterweight boxing championship with a unanimous 15-round decision over tough Eddie Blay of Ghana.

There was never any doubt of the outcome from the early rounds and as the fight progressed it was a question of whether the 30-year-old Blay, who fights out of Italy, would hang on for the duration.

Gray weighed 147 to Blay's 146.

There were no knockdowns, but Blay was shaken up several times by the hard-punching Canadian champ who now is looking towards his next fight—a shot at the world title held by Jose Napoles of Mexico.

"I want . . . the world's title," said the native of Windsor, N.S., who was far ahead on the score cards of all three officials—referee Sammy Luftspring and judges Tony Canzano and Jackie Silvers. "If I got over this guy, he (Napoles) promised me a shot at it."

The five-point system was used for the Commonwealth championship fight at Maple Leaf Gardens with the winner of a round getting five points and his opponent four or fewer.

Luftspring's card was 73 points for Gray to 63 for Blay. Canzano was 75-62 and Silver 72-67, both if Gray's favor.

Gray said he was hoping his manager, Irv Ungerman, could stage the world title fight in Toronto "but if we gotta go to Mexico, we'll go."

Ungerman was quite upset by the meagre turnout for the fight, estimated at 6,000.

The Gray-Blay match was the feature event of the doubleheader championship card that saw Gary Summerhays, a slugging 23-year-old from Brantford, Ont., took the Canadian light heavyweight crown from veteran Al Sparks of Winnipeg with a 12-round split decision.

Gray earned only $5,500 for the title fight to $11,000 for Blay, but Ungerman explained it was not a matter of economics that there was such a wide variance.

"Clyde is a Toronto boy, he should fight here in Toronto," Ungerman said. "He should show the people what he's got.

"If we had won the title in Ghana, in Africa, they'd still say who is Clyde Gray. We wanted to show them tonight."

Gray, who posted his 36th win in 39 fights, said he was never in any trouble and that the Ghanaian's counter punching was never any problem.

RUGBY FINAL

Mount Newton of Victoria is scheduled to face Quamichan of Duncan in the Vancouver Island junior high school rugby championship final on Wednesday.

Game time is 2:30 p.m. at Mount Newton.

Shamrocks Hope to Land Three of Five Draft Picks

VANCOUVER — Victoria Shamrocks expect three of their five choices to try to join the team following the inaugural Western Lacrosse Association draft of junior players here Monday.

Walt Weaver, a high-scoring 200-pounder who played last season for Surrey Salmonbellies, was Victoria's top pick.

Weaver has said he does not wish to move from the mainland but Shamrocks expect the star to be good trade material. All other WLA clubs, particularly New Westminster Salmonbellies, are interested.

Shamrocks, who picked second and fourth under an arrangement in which the last two clubs in the league shared the first four choices, grabbed Ron Kulcheski as second pick.

Kulcheski, who played five games with the Irish last season, is eager to join the Victoria club on a regular basis and should provide some added muscle. Kulcheski played last season with Burnaby Cablevision.

Shamrocks then picked eighth, 12th and 16th to come up with forwards John Hanna and Glen Bourassa of Surrey as well as Bill Longman of Coquitlam Jayhawks.

Victoria-manager Norm Kowalyk said the first two have indicated their willingness to try out for the Island club.

Coquitlam Adanacs, who finished last in the four-team WLA last season, had the first and third picks. Dave Durante of Richmond Roadrunners, the 1971 Canadian junior champions, was the first choice and Steve Matheson of Burnaby was third.

Other clubs then got a crack at graduating mainland juniors. Shamrocks already had exclusive rights to all junior players on the Island.

Vancouver Burrards picked up Roger Dubyna of Jayhawks as their first choice and Salmonbellies followed by obtaining the rights to Ian Kennedy of Burnaby.

Dubyna, who is from Nanaimo and plans to return to the Island, has drawn the interest of the Shamrocks, who feel a deal could be made with Burrards.

Among the usual rumors emanating from deals made at such meetings was a report that Gaylord Powless, an outstanding veteran player in Ontario, has decided to line up with Adanacs.

Robinson Paces Win

Jack Robinson fired 21 points Monday to lead London Boxing Club to a 64-51 victory over Hotel Douglas in a Victoria Senior "B" Men's Basketball League battle at Central Junior High School.

Victory earned Boxers sole possession of first place.

Ron Bowker scored 16 points to top Hotel marksmen.

LONDON BOXING CLUB (64) — Jack Robinson 21, George Biggs, Sid Chow 13, Mark Anderson, Alfred Haas 2, Bill Hingley 3, Rich Connolly 1, Loris Corlette 6, Jim McKay 4, Duff McCaghey 12.

HOTEL DOUGLAS (51) — Al Huddleston 3, Barry Turner 2, Don Horwood 2, Jack Newnham 6, Dan Wade, Jack Lusk 6, Bruce Vallor 4, Bob Hucul 4, Bob Bell, Dave Wirtanen 2, Ron Bowker 16, Leon Mitchell 6.

Rams Scamper Into Hoop Lead

Mt. Douglas Rams snapped a three-way tie to take over the Victoria High School Boys' Basketball League lead Monday by downing host Reynolds Roadrunners, 53-37.

TOP PRIZE OF $10,000 FOR DISTAFF TOURNEY

MONTREAL (CP) — The purse for the inaugural Canadian leg of the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour scheduled here June 12-17 will be $50,000, it was announced Monday by J. Louis Levesque.

Levesque, well-known in North American financial and horse racing circles, said that the first prize will be $10,000.

The event at the Municipal Golf Club will offer the third highest purse of the 1973 LPGA tour.

The tour is marking its 25th anniversary this year and the total purse has climbed to a record $1.3 million.

Levesque sponsored Jocelyn Bourassa of Shawinigan, Que., on the 1972 tour. Miss Bourassa, rookie of-the-year, was 19th on the money list and earned $16,098—a record for a tour newcomer.

JOINING select group of major league baseball pitchers making $100,000 or more per year is Mickey Lolich, who is reported to have signed 1973 contract with Detroit Tigers for $100,000. Other hurlers in six-figure salary bracket are Bob Gibson (St. Louis), Steve Carlton (Philadelphia) and Juan Marichal (San Francisco).

Richmond Curlers Sweep Into Brier

NELSON (CP) — Jack Tucker of Richmond Winter Club won the British Columbia curling championship Monday by defeating Rod Carmichael of Fernie 8-6 for a sweep of the best-of-three series.

Tucker, 32-year-old airlines pilot, won the opening game earlier Monday 9-7 and now advances to the Canadian championship March 5-10 at Edmonton.

His rink consists of lead Gerry Peckham, second Jim Armstrong, and third Bernie Sparkes, who has competed in five national finals and last year skipped the B.C. entry.

Armstrong, a graduate of Esquimalt Secondary School now in his second year of dentistry at University of British Columbia, threw third rocks for Tucker when the rink won the Playland Cashpiel last November. Sparkes did not curl in the Playland event.

In the second game of the provincial final, Carmichael stole one on the eighth end to go ahead 6-5. Tucker blanked the ninth end to retain last rock and drew for one in the 10th to tie it 6-6.

On the 12th, Carmichael was light with last rock and Tucker stole two to take the lead. Carmichael ran out of rocks on the 12th.

In the first game, Tucker broke a 5-5 tie with three in the ninth, and was never headed.

Ball Lockout 'Illegal'

NEW YORK (AP) — Marvin Miller, denouncing an "illegal threat of a lockout", by major league baseball clubs, said Monday player representatives would meet Friday to discuss the owners' lastest offer.

Miller, the executive director of the Major League Baseball Players Association, indicated the player representatives probably would take the proposal to the entire membership.

The owners, in making their latest offer last Thursday, announced they were postponing early spring training which was to have opened Wednesday for invited players, usually pitchers and catchers.

Miller, however, said that spring training does not technically start until March 1, the date set out in all player contracts.

". . . We have only a threat of a lockout by the owners," said Miller, "but even that threat is illegal under the Taft-Hartley Act, because in the context of the present facts it constitutes a violation of the owners' duty to bargain in good faith."

Miller said there "has not at any time during these negotiations been a strike threat by the players, nor is there one now."

Miller declined to give his opinion of the 12-page proposal made by the owners last Thursday, but did score what owners' representative John Gaherin termed a landmark proposal calling for arbitration in settling individual salary disputes.

In criticizing what he called "this worthless arbitration proposal," Miller said a player could not seek arbitration of his contract two straight years.

Miller also said that the arbitration proposal stated that the current maximum salary-cut provision would not pertain to players eligible for arbitration — those with three years in the major leagues.

"The year after arbitration, a player could be cut to nothing," said Miller.

He also was scornful of a point in the arbitration proposal which, he said, states that an arbitratorin reaching a decision could not consider the financial status of a player, any testimonials to a player's ability, prior offers to the player and the salaries of other baseball players or players in other sports.

Other issues involved in the negotiations include minimum salaries, a pension-benefit plan and the controversial reserve clause which binds a player to a club until he is released, traded or retires.

In 'Island Cup' Matches? Can There Be Happiness

If measured by popularity with the competitors, the Inter-Clib League matches for the Willie Park Driver are "numero uno" in the eyes of the district's golfers.

There is no intention of competing for popularity, but Al Zimmerman has an idea which could generate added entertainment and excitement for Vancouver Island golfers.

It is worth discussing because, while designated as competition, it can be achieved without adding another load to the already-overburdened course schedules.

He's had his fling as a tour pro and, from pro shops in Portland and Seattle, has served the Pacific Northwest well. Zimmerman has had numerous tastes of glory but he can't recall a "more entertaining or enjoyable year of golfing" than was his fortune last year.

Recovered from a serious illness, the not-so-retired pro, at 64, almost won the Times Island Open (losing on the 37th hole to Vaughan Trapp), and pocketed change from more than a half-dozen tournaments.

Success notwithstandiing, the fellowship and overall attitude provided the greatest pleasure, and it's not beneath Zimmerman's dignity to return some of the kindness. He's doing it with an idea. Two ideas, if you want to count plans for a new invitational tournament at Glen Meadows.

Glen Meadows invitational is still in the idea machine. (They're talking of bringing the top four amateurs from every club on the Island to compete as a team, probably over 36 holes. More on that later, if time and interest warrants it.)

★ ★ ★

More appealing at the moment is Zimmerman's suggestion of a "Vancouver Island Cup" series. Borrowing from the blueprints of the Ryder and Hudson Cup matches, the Island Cup match would pit the 10 top professionals against the 10 top amateurs.

Selection would be made, Zimmerman suggests, on a point system from appearances in the many Island tournaments. The point system can be set up to cover both medal and match-play tournaments:

With 20 golfers playing off, only five starting times would have to be borrowed from a club. Make it 10 teeoff times if Al gets his wish and a 36-hole playoff is decreed. A two-day confrontation is preferred because singles can make up one day's play and the alwayys-entertaining scotch foursomes can account for the second engagement.

The point system would stimulate appearance of "the best" in the many Island tournaments. The suggested list includes the Island Open, the City Amateur, and the various opens such as Cedar Hill, Cowichan, Esquimalt, Nanaimo, Alberni and etc.

★ ★ ★

Also considered is the thought the matches could prove appealing to spectators. The idea of head-to-head confrontation between professional and amateur is attractive.

The affair could be sponsored easily enough. With only 20 golfers to "honor" at the final callover, it could be a low-budget promotion yet the interest, because of the point-accumulation system, would be sustained over the entire summer season.

The Victoria and District Committee's annual meeting comes up March 1. The business should be routine, and if Zimmerman doesn't make it back from Hawaii by that date, then I'd like to see someone carry his suggestion to the Committee.

There is a great deal of merit in Zim's offering.

Duncan Rinks Win

LAKE COWICHAN — Duncan rinks won three events in the Lake Cowichan Curling Club men's bonspiel Sunday.

Jack James took the "A" event by beating Victoria Playland's Bob Gallaugher 11-10 in an extra end. Gary Wright took the "C" title and Vern Kaspick won the "D" event. The "B" event went to a Vancouver Island rink picked up by Dick Fisher of Nanaimo and skipped by John Balloch of Victoria.

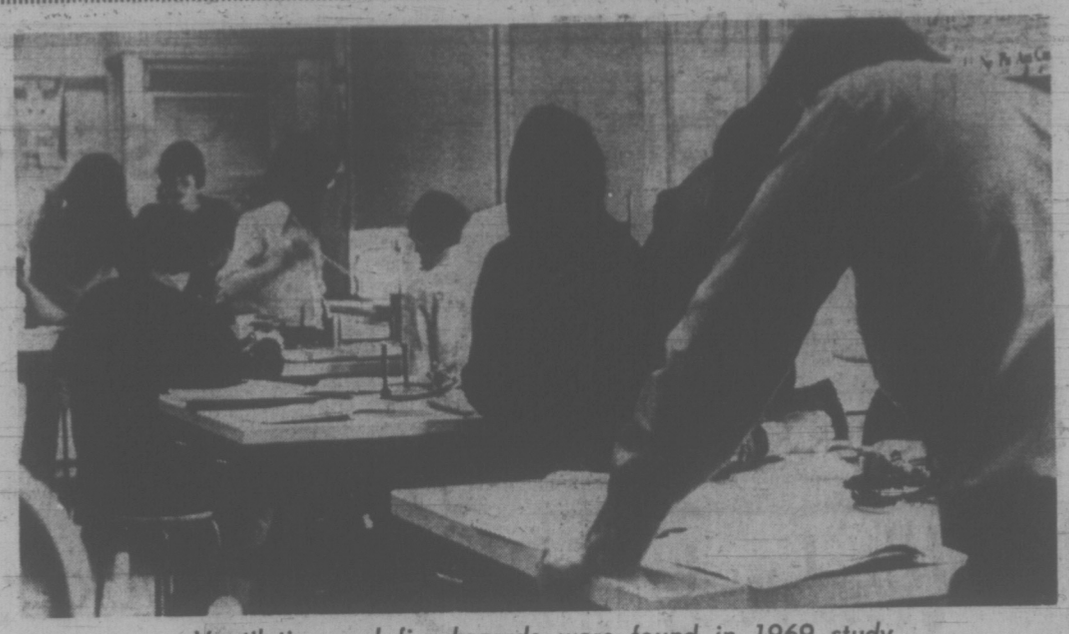
'It Gets Pretty High' When Gases Waft Around



Ventilation and fire hazards were found in 1969 study

Lab Work a Real Headache

Victoria Times
TUESDAY, FEB. 13, 1973 17
SECOND SECTION

The chemistry lab at Mount View senior secondary has no ventilation system and sometimes as many as 30 students perform experiments which release poisonous gases into the small room.

The biology labs at the school are also without ventilation and the smell of formaldehyde often leaves students with headaches and nausea.

The physics lab has uncovered electrical outlets dangerously close to where students do their experiments.

At Mount View they need $72,000 to rectify these and other fire and laboratory safety hazards.

The money for renovations is part of Greater Victoria school board's $1,664,900 building program which goes to referendum Saturday.

Eight other schools in the district will benefit from referendum money and most of the projects deal with existing safety hazards.

"Actually, to put in any kind of adequate lab, we'd have to have a whole new room and it would take more money than the whole referendum," explained Mount View chemistry teacher Tom Hatcher.

He pointed out a small, unventilated storage room for all the lab's chemicals and said that with so many flammable materials stored together, metal fire retardant cabinets are a necessity the school does not have.

"There's no ventilation in lab itself either," Hatcher said.

"Imagine what it's like when 30 kids with 15 beakers experiment with silver and produce nitric oxide — it gets pretty high.

"The only ventilation is to open windows," Hatcher said, "and take your chances with pneumonia."

The school's two biology labs, situated in annexes, have small storage rooms with no fire resistant cabinets and only one exit in each.

"We should have two doors in these storage preparation rooms, according to safety regulations," said biology teacher Ted Sarkissian. "If there's a fire there should be two ways out."

"There have really been surprisingly few accidents in schools," said Mount View principal Robert Hunter, "when you consider what look like potentially hazardous situations."

Hunter agreed that most of the planned renovations were basically patch-work measures.

The problem in most secondary school science labs is that curriculum has changed and progressed rapidly while the facilities have not been able to change in tune with more advanced studies.

Mount Douglas senior secondary, Oak Bay senior secondary and Oak Bay junior secondary also need referendum funds for laboratory safety.

Seven of the nine schools also need fire safety improvements.

At Mount View, fire walls, new exit doors, wider staircases, smoke doors and improvements to the fire alarm system are to be instituted if the referendum goes through.

Many of the safety improvements recommended stem from a 1969 report by the B.C. Research Council.

That report, commissioned by the school board following an explosion in a school lab, criticized the fact that many labs, such as the ones at Mount View, are built in classrooms not meant for laboratory work.

Unsafe storage of chemicals, poor ventilation, insufficient exits, absence of safety equipment and lack of student discipline also came under fire in the report.

The school board acted on several of the report's recommendations immediately, according to board spokesmen, but many of the needed renovations cost a great deal of money and had to wait for referendum approval.

'Horrendous' Increases Seen in Apartment Rent

Proposed legislation which will take the lid off assessments on commercial properties, including apartment buildings, could result in apartment renters paying "horrendous rent increases."

Previously all real estate has been subject to a 10 per cent annual limit. Amendments to the Assessment Equalization Act presented by Premier Dave Barrett Friday could send commercial, municipal and school taxes rocketing by up to 300 per cent, according to some sources.

"Don't write a story saying we're going to up the rents" in response to assessment jumps, said Wes Dickie, president of the Apartment Owners Association, "but the increase in assessment will have to be passed on."

It's estimated half the population here lives in apartments.

Besides the increase in rent —which in some cases could go as high as $9.50 per suite per month—Dickie said long-term effects of the legislation on apartment owners will be disastrous.

"The effect of this legislation will be horrendous. We've seen the results in scores of American cities," said Dickie.

"Square miles of apartments are abandoned by owners. Once you make it so tough for the owner that he can't make a profit from the property, he'll get out of the business.

"In some cases he'll let it go back to the municipality for taxes, claim inequity and only then can he get out from under the burden.

"This thing goes on and on. Once one building goes it spreads to others. The municipality loses taxes from one building, there's a smaller tax base and it makes it more difficult for other properties. It's a horrible situation."

Chamber of Commerce president Terry Farmer says the legislation is inevitable, and the only way to prevent many businessmen from going bankrupt is for the city to establish a lower commercial mill rate.

"The city must act promptly or a lot of businessmen, particularly smaller businessmen are going to go bankrupt under the impact of these taxes," Farmer told a Monday meeting of the Central Business Advisory Committee.

Farmer said property taxes for an average Victoria merchant would increase by 43 per cent if the proposed legislation is passed.

"Many businessmen already have a difficult time staying in business," Farmer said. "The onus is clearly on the city to stagger the blow."

DICKIE
... fears long-term effect

The committee resolved to so recommend to city council.

Assessments are supposed to be made on 50 per cent of a property's market value. However, the former five and 10 per cent ceilings imposed by the Socred government, combined with zooming property values have left assessments lagging far behind true values.

Farmer said most commercial assessments in Victoria stand at about 35 per cent of market value. With removal of the ceiling, the 50 per cent assessment becomes mandatory.

Farmer said it could mean a $900 annual tax leap on a property valued at about $100,000 for land and improvements.

Farmer said the amendments to the act as introduced by the premier were unclear in their wording. They made an exemption of properties "used for residential purposes or classified as farmland"—did this mean apartments were exempted?

Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer confirmed later in an interview that apartments were not exempted. Lorimer said some apartment owners would end up paying more taxes if their properties were undervalued and others would pay less if their properties were overvalued.

Lorimer said it was not the intention of the government to make anyone pay "one cent more" than they have under existing legislation.

He said the intention of the amendments was to spread out evenly the assessments on land and improvements.

Meanwhile the city will benefit from the legislation, if it comes into effect.

City assessor Alf Joyce said 50 per cent assessments would mean a big jump in revenue if no separate mill rate for commercial, industrial and apartment land is introduced.

Semi-Mall Proposed For Broad

Organizers of the week-long Victoria Days celebrations now want to close off Broad Street in downtown Victoria instead of Douglas Street.

Downtown Business Association spokesman Don Nixon today told city council's public works committee Broad Street could be made into what he called a semi-mall.

This meant allowing traffic on the street but banning parking and partially filling the road with stalls, stands and side-shows.

He said emphasis could be placed on Centennial Square, which lies at the end of Broad Street, where dances and shows could be held.

Aldermen approved the scheme in principle, although Ald. Sam Bawlf was afraid that if it was mis-handled it might jeopardize the city's plans for making a permanent traffic-free mall on Government and View streets.

Victoria Days take place May 22-27.

Sweet Smell of Sex Deadly Beetle Lure

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

Bark beetles in B.C. may in future find themselves lured to destruction by the sweet smell of sex.

Scientists at the Pacific Forest Research Centre in Victoria are experimenting with synthetic chemical attractants which duplicate the natural lures used by female insects to attract a crowd.

Bark beetles are a plague to the lumber industry because they kill the trees they burrow in to make nests. In one recent 10-year span it's estimated over a billion cubic feet of spruce timber in the province were destroyed by the spruce bark beetle.

Dr. John Chapman, an entomologist at the federal research laboratory, explains that the beetles settle into the nutritionally rich outer sapwood and inner bark, boring long galleries for their batches of eggs. The grubs fan out in their foraging, girdling and destroying the tree.

The first female beetles to attack a tree produce the chemicals which not only attract males but more females. Unless there are enough beetles to kill the tree it will heal and the resin it produces will hamper brood development.

Chapman says the value of the synthetic attractants, first developed in Texas, is still debatable but is promising.

CHAPMAN
... promising results

Among ways they might be used on the spruce bark beetle:

—Tricking beetles into attacking the wrong size or species of tree with resulting brood failure.

—Baiting trees ready for logging so the attracted beetles would be destroyed.

—Spreading the chemical signal so widely in the forest the beetles would be confused and lose their ability to concentrate on a few trees.

—Attracting beetles to trees which have been treated with an insecticide to kill them or to trees treated with a chemical so they are unsuitable for brood development.

—Baiting trees around windfall patches or logging slash to hold populations there.

It may all sound simple enough but it hasn't proved to be. Earlier research in California showed, after a lot of work, that the species of beetle under investigation there produced three different chemicals which had to be combined to be effective.

Chapman says another problem is the limited range of the attractants, which means bait centres have to be set up at frequent intervals.

Another problem is the beetles' predators respond to the baits and can be affected where insecticides are being used.

Because the chemicals are custom-made at the moment, they are expensive. One of them, for example, costs $1,200 for a little less than a pint. But 10 drops of it will bait a tree for most of a season.

The research centre will have a team of researchers in the field about the beginning of April, said Chapman. They will be mostly based at a station south of Prince George where testing will continue through to September.

'Recognition First' was the plea of picketers

'It's a Long Way to Freedom' Independent Schools Chorus

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

More than 100 school children, sporting knee socks, blazers and school ties, picketed the Legislative Buildings this morning, singing "It's a Long Way to Freedom."

They came from St. Andrew's, St. Patrick's, St. Joseph's and St. Ann's independent schools, and they were there to support a delegation from the Federation of Independent Schools Associations who met with the cabinet at 11:15 a.m.

FISA is seeking government recognition for 140 independent schools in B.C. and after many years of fighting is finally getting a hearing from the province.

"I think we'll get a fair hearing," said FISA spokesman Jerry Ensing.

"We want recognition first," he said. "We know it's not NDP policy to support financing so we'll just talk about that and hope to get it later."

Premier Barrett said this morning before entering a cabinet meeting that it has been party policy of the NDP for some time that the government not provide financial aid to independent schools.

"We can't give them a change of party policy," the premier said. "How successful they are depends on how successful they are within the party."

The FISA brief presented to cabinet argues that in modern society man "must acknowledge the validity of differing philosophies of education that can never be contained within the unitary, neutral public system."

The independent schools, which represent about 23,000 students in B.C. say they want legal recognition so that: students can transfer freely between schools, their teachers can have access to seniority and pension benefits, students can have access to educational services, all post-secondary institutions and equal graduation rights.

Sister Shiela Moss from St. Ann's Academy, spokesman for demonstrating students, said the schools feel it is unfair that their parents have to pay twice for education, once through taxes and once through school fees.

She said she didn't see the demise of independent schools if no government financing is offered but added that enrolment in these schools has been declining and financing is a large part of the reason.

One angry young student in the crowd summed up the students' feelings by saying: "My parents have the right by the Human Rights Act to send me to school where ever they want. Why should they have to pay twice?"

Pensions: New Issue in Equality Cause

The reasons used to condone unequal pension benefits for women employees by Canadian business managements are archaic, says a senior official of the federal department of labor.

One of the common reasons used, said Sylva Gelber, director of the department's women bureau, is that women employees have no needs for pension plans while male employees do have such needs.

"While it is clearly assumed that all male employees have financial responsibilities for dependants, it is also clearly assumed that all female employees do not have financial responsibilities for dependents," she told the Midwestern Ontario Labor Councils' Education Institute.

"The fact of the matter is that over a ¼ million working women . . . are separated, deserted, divorced or widowed. Add the million single women who make up more than a third of the female labor force and that easy assumption of no female employee need, begins to pale," she said.

"The outworn assumption that a woman once married is a woman with life-long economic security should, by this time, have been obliterated."

She quoted statistics pointing to the increase in marriage breakdown: there were only 36 divorces per 100,000 marriages in 1961 and the rate increased to 136 per 100,000 in 1970.

Another consideration, she said, are the married women in the labor force. "A very considerable percentage of married women do work to maintain a decent standard of living," she said.

In addition to the tradition of cutting women off from pension plans by early retirement — 60 for women and 65 for men under the same plan — under many schemes conditions of eligibility for women are not equal to those for men, she said.

"A man may have been entitled to enter the pension plan after one year of employment, while the woman . . . would only be entitled to enter the same plan after five years."

Women's pension levels, based on the number of years of employment, have been adversely affected by the earlier womens' retirement and this shortening of the entitlement period at the beginning.

A favorite argument against providing equal pension rights for women is that since women live longer, the cost of providing pensions for women inevitably will be higher, said Miss Gelber.

"Quite apart from the cry of anguish raised at the prospect of altering plans which would eventuate in the payment to women of pensions on the same terms as those paid to men, little attention has been given to the unhappy fact that women's wage rates are universally low.

"In economic terms, it is quite possible that the low rates of women's earning could alone offset the additional years of life expectancy," she said.

Woman Docker Fights Washroom War

PORT ALICE (CP) — Candy Fawcett says she isn't going to let a little thing like the lack of a women's washroom stand between her and fulltime employment as a logging longshorewoman on the Port Alice waterfront.

"I'm not the frills and lace type, and a job on a boat would suit me just fine," said Mrs. Fawcett, a vivacious 24-year-old mother of two whose husband is a millworker.

She said she is determined to win the washroom war, now being fought on the docks at Rayonier Canada Ltd.'s mill in this community.

UNION BACKING

The tempest in a toilet bowl centres on the company's refusal to hire women on the boats on grounds that proper washroom facilities, as required by the Factories Act, simply aren't up to scratch.

The United Paperworkers International Union, local 514, has complained to Labor Minister William King that women have been thwarted in their efforts to obtain Rayonier employment for sometime on the washroom issue.

Mike Durkin, president of the Port Alice local, said that although there are no women's toilets in the immediate dock area, there is one in the company's offices about 60 yards from the docks.

And the latest woman seeking employment — Doris Rowan — said she has been turned down twice in the past month because of the washroom war. She said in an affidavit that personnel supervisor Harry Hamper told her she couldn't be hired because of the toilet shortage.

"It was the same thing when I tried to get hired," said Mrs. Fawcett. "The foreman said he could not hire us because the toilet facilities were inadequate.

60 YARD DASH

"Well, there's a 10-minute coffee break in a four-hour shift and that's plenty of time to go 60 yards to the office."

Mrs. Fawcett says she wants a job as a checker, the person that makes sure the right load of pulp goes into the right hold of a vessel during loading. A checker earns $4.29 an hour.

"I would never take a job away from a man who has to feed a wife and kids, but if there's a job a man doesn't want, then I'd like a chance at it," she said. "The company has been having a little trouble finding people for these jobs."

Mrs. Fawcett said she went to the docks "every morning for a week" recently in an effort to get Rayonier to sign her up.

"I wore a hardhat and a pair of my husband's safety shoes with steel caps because he takes the same size I do. I walked down on the dock past the men to the checker's office and I got a lot of rude comments but I just kept on walking."

She said that on at least one occasion, three other women were there.

"We stood in line and the foreman picked the men — not us. That's the way hiring is done. But to be fair, I must say some of the men were sent home too."

INSPECTOR'S RULE

Mrs. Fawcett said that to date, the company has hired only one woman checker. That was last year, and she worked only twice before being let go.

Durkin said several women in Port Alice have expressed an interest in working as checkers, but have been discouraged by the company and the washroom war.

Peter Jemmeson, public health and factories inspector for the Upper Vancouver Island Health Unit, confirmed in an interview that he was the one who deemed women's toilet facilities inadequate on the Port Alice waterfront.

"I didn't pace out the distance down the dock but I'd say it was closer to 100 yards than 60 yards to the office washroom. I would not like to see anyone do that and back in 10 minutes in the rain."

The personnel supervisor, Hamper, had no comment on the washroom war.

A Rayonier spokesman in Vancouver said the company does not discriminate against women in its employment practices and has several working in sawmills and logging camps.

"We are just adhering to the Factories Act in this case."

Banked Sperm Disabled

CHICAGO (UPI) — The freezing of human sperm for storage in sperm banks depletes the efficacy of the sperm in inducing pregnancies through artificial insemination, according to articles in the current issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

"Regardless of initial sperm density, freezing and thawing results in a decline in the per cent of motile spermatozoa," says an article by Drs. Keith D. Smith and Emil Steinberger.

Motility remains relatively stable for about 36 months following the initial motility loss from freezing. After three years, there is a second, but less serious, decline in motility.

Nader Group Joins Study

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has decided to let a Ralph Nader-backed consumer group assist in its study of the safety of hundreds of food additives, from cinnamon to garlic.

James Turner, a lawyer for the Consumer Action Group for Improved Food and Drugs, and co-author with Nader of "The Chemical Feast," called the development a "breakthrough."

The FDA in 1969 at President Nixon's prompting began reviewing more than 700 substances "generally recognized as safe." That review has resulted in one of those substances — saccharin — being removed from the list.

Down the Up Aisle

Life must have been simple before supermarkets.

Back in the olden days you could enter a store for, say, string beans, cereal, peanut butter and bread, and probably be outside again before the engine of the Stutz-Bearcat cooled off.

These days there are so many kinds of everything that I invariably spend the better part of an afternoon pushing my cart down all the "up" aisles and sobbing.

Do I want canned beans? If so, shall I get French-cut, whole, diagonally-sliced or the kind with the pimentos that our daughter always picks out and hides in her napkin?

Or should I buy the frozen ones, which not only come whole, French-cut, or diagonally-sliced, but with almonds, mushrooms, or nasty little pearl onions that even I pick out and hide in my napkin?

Cereal is worse. I can never remember whether the children have asked me to buy the brand that contains plastic Dracula teeth or the one featuring a miniature boomerang, "Just Like Those the Aborigines Use to Bring Down Wild Game With" (equally effective when used against dogs, cats, and Dresden figurines).

Peanut butter comes in four sizes. The largest, while a fantastic bargain, is so heavy that someone always manages to drop it into the sink, rendering useless not only $1.30 worth of peanut butter, but six dirty coffee cups as well.

Once I determine what size to buy, I find that I must choose between chunky, smooth or a particularly revolting variety which includes jelly.

And what kind of bread shall I smear it onto? White, rye (with or without caraway), whole wheat, half wheat, honey sesame, raisin, sandwich sliced, French egg twist, diet or Irish potato?

At least when my grandmother shopped, she wasn't apt to forget to buy peanut butter and bring home a bunch of plastic daffodils and eighteen half-priced chocolate Santa Clauses instead.

Every homemaker is concerned about steadily rising food prices, but particularly those who have to manage on a low food budget.

Your Food Dollar offers tips for obtaining the best value for the money you spend on food. The booklet suggests, for instance, that you plan your meals ahead for one week and shop accordingly.

Try to include seasonal foods, because while they are plentiful they are lower priced. For some dishes, cheaper foods of lesser quality serve as well as the same food in top quality.

The price of meat is no indication of food value. Inexpensive cuts are as nourishing as expensive roasts and steaks. The wise shopper compares the cost per serving rather than per pound. Remember also, cheese costs less per ounce in large packages than in small ones.

If your food budget is greatly restricted, you have to keep the purchase of so-called convenience foods to a minimum. You will have to decide if the extra cost of frozen meals, soup or pastry mixes, dehydrated potatoes etc., is worth it for you. Or could you use the time needed to prepare these foods from scratch more profitably?

For this helpful booklet send your request to: Information Division Canada department of agriculture, Ottawa, Ont. K1A OC7. Please allow at least three to four weeks for delivery.

Liberated U.S. women are finding their bonds easier to live with—U.S. bonds, that is.

The U.S. Treasury department has announced that women buyers and beneficiaries of the savings bond scheme no longer have to use a 'Miss', 'Mrs.' or any other title before their name.

Social Security numbers must be used instead.

The Aries person is imbued with pioneering spirit, enjoys lively discussions with Gemini, has doubts and fears about Pisces, is physically attracted to Leo, often marries Libra, travels with Sagittarius and must exercise caution with Aquarius, Cancer and Capricorn. Greater freedom, more opportunities for happiness indicated for Aries in 1973.

ARIS (March 21-April 19): Home, marriage, personal environment — these are highlighted. Get going with new project. Stop feeling that others would be offended if you made abrupt change. Those who really care will understand, including mate or partner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Spiritual qualities surface. Meditate. Forces are scattered. However, if you give yourself time, success emerges from welter of confusion. Aquarian has lesson to impart. Be receptive even if pill is bitter.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Study Taurus message. Open yourself to creative experience. Emotional responses are honed to razor sharpness. Give yourself room to create. Revere your own style. Be yourself. Hear sound of your own voice.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are aided through unorthodox procedure. Obtain hint from Gemini message. Write, speak, communicate. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Answers are obtainable if you will but ask. Analyze—draw conclusions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Avoid mistake of mixing friendship with money. Otherwise, you might lose both—key now is to be diplomatic without being weak. Gift is on agenda. Be thankful without being maudlin. Taurus, Libra persons are featured.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Creative spark could ignite advancement, trigger event which leads to fulfillment of ambitions. Be a self-starter. Mold events. Take charge. Be master of your own destiny. Stop brooding. Be decisive. You come through test with flying colors.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Financial situation improves. You work harder but results are constructive. Relationships intensify. What appeared to be out of reach becomes available. Capricorn is involved. Behind scenes activity benefits you.

Help for the '10th Child'

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

At least one in every 10 school children has a learning disability.

These are the students who fail in school and too often become failures in society.

They're not stupid but they're frustrated. For too long their teachers and parents have viewed them as problem children instead of children with problems.

"Learning disability" is not just another over-worked piece of educational jargon. It describes a very real phenomenon that may effect nearly a million children in Canada.

As educators become more aware of learning problems that face a large sector of school children, the concept of learning assistance teachers and learning assistance centres has gained widespread support.

In Victoria, a local initiatives grant of $30,272 has recently been awarded a concerned group of parents and educators who have set up a learning disabilities projects in Centennial United Church.

They say the inability of many children to learn through more conventional classroom methods does not necessarily indicate intellectual inadequacies but rather emotional problems or faulty balance, co-ordination and other motor skills.

Early Detection

Their problems may stem from social or even medical problems, and though the project works admit they may not be able to work on the cause they believe they can improve the child's functional abilities.

The earlier learning difficulties can be recognized and dealt with, the better, says Mary Breer, spokesman for the group, since problems tend to snowball and grow out of proportion with the original handicap.

"A good percentage of dropouts, delinquents and adults with social problems started with learning difficulties," says Breer. They feel stupid and frustrated at school, rebel, drop-outs, and soon end up in juvenile court.

Twelve people are working on the project which began three weeks ago under remedial expert Doug Worthington.

They have opened their doors to any kindergarten and junior high school children who have learning problems.

"We want children from these two age groups," says Breer, "because most elementary school children have access to learning assistance in the schools."

Project workers try to work on a one-to-one basis with students, developing the pre-academic skills of balance, preception, special relationships and, most importantly, building up their own self-concept.

They hope to work directly with parents as well, because just as children are marked as failures if they don't "fit-in" with the schoolroom learning process, so are their parents branded as failures.

The project works on much the same principles as Greater Victoria school board's Learning Assistance Centre.

That centre co-ordinates the work of 24 learning assistant teachers who each serve one or two schools in the district, spending all day giving remedial help to small groups of children.

It also works with 50 university students who give individual tutoring at the centre to children who come for an hour three times a week.

The centre takes referrals from school principals and deals mostly with children in Grades 1, 2, and 3.

"The children like to come here," says director Marion Foster, "they thrive on individual attention.

Teachers Needed

"Lack of staff is our biggest problem," she said. "Classrooms teachers can do a great deal of remedial work and we try to help them but there should be a learning assistance teacher in every school."

Breer says that one of the main stumbling blocks in working with these children is that many teachers, even the special learning assistants, have no training in the field.

She hopes her project, which ends May 31, can evolve on a more permanent basis or will at least encourage the schools to hire more trained learning assistance teachers.

She's backed in her hopes by school trustee Daphne Temple who wants to see these teachers in all elementary and junior high schools.

"My concern is that every child has a fair chance and if he has a learning disability he doesn't have a fair chance," Temple said.

"In the past we've just lumped kids together and said those who didn't perform and those who didn't were called a "failure," she said.

"When we went to school," Breer agreed, "there wasn't the same pressure to conform that there is today."

Breer, Foster and Temple agree that learning assistance programs won't solve every child's problem or put an end to "bad kids" or "slow kids" but they can do a great deal for that 10 to 20 per cent of children who have been ignored too long because they can't learn as quickly or as easily as "normal" students.

Youth Against Wilderness: New Approach to Delinquency

By GARY BALL
North Bay Nugget

NORTH BAY, Ont. (CP) — Will a 90-mile snowshoe trek show a juvenile offender the answer to his problem?

Project DARE—Development through Adventure, Responsibility and Education—has set out to pit 36 juvenile first-offenders against the bush and themselves to find that solution.

Jim Purcell, a former high-school teacher, and Bert Moorcroft, former officer of correctional institutions, have set up Camp Wendigo at a lake 30 miles south of here where the boys, 14 to 16, spend three months learning outdoor skills and survival techniques.

The boys, sentenced to training schools by the courts, are specially selected for the camp.

Similar wilderness camps have existed in British Columbia for about 10 years. One of them operates only on weekends, for boys found delinquent by the courts. The boys are picked up at their schools Friday afternoons and return to the city Monday mornings. The best-known camp in B.C., at Agassiz, is similar in operation to the Ontario experiment, with a strenuous training period ending in a survival hike that includes mountain climbing.

Project DARE doesn't want to make woodsmen out of the boys but camp organizers do hope they will be better able to get along with themselves and society.

Part of the boy's experience is a four-day solo hike through the northern bush with only a knife, matches, sleeping bag and pouch of dry soup. Organizers say four days alone and hungry give a boy time to think and straighten out.

LEARN TO COPE

Mr. Moorcroft said:

"We show him how to cope with the impossible with the idea of preparing him to go back on the street and give 100 per cent of himself."

In their first month, the boys first spend 110 hours in the classroom at the spartan logging camp learning to build fires, handle axes and make shelters. At the same time, they practise outdoor skills.

The routine begins at 6.30 a.m. with a three-mile run before breakfast. The boys were taking morning dips in Lake Wendigo until November, when the ice got too thick to open up easily.

In the second month the project becomes Outward Venture, in which the boys are pushed beyond their normal physical limits in mountain climbing, canoeing, marathon hiking and survival exercises, including the four-day ordeal.

A check is kept on the boys during the solo survival exercise, Mr. Purcell said.

EASED BACK IN

Twelve boys start this week on the 90-mile snowshoe hike from their camp to a second Project DARE camp, north of Parry Sound.

The third month is a winding-down period called Community Involvement to prepare the boys to hit the streets again. They participate in hockey games, visit the Canada Manpower centre and the Canadian Forces Base in North Bay, and do forestry work for the ministry of natural resources.

"In the bush they have all worked together and now we want them to see how people in the community band together," said Mr. Moorcroft.

In the final month the boys also look after groups of school children who come to the camp for outdoor education.

Mr. Purcell said: "Our kids have to accept the responsibility for other kids."

Camp Wendigo, in operation since last May, has graduated only 15 boys, so it has few results by which to judge the success of the program.

The staff can judge only by the promises from its graduates who have said they'll be back—for a visit.

CALORIC NEEDS DROP WITH AGE

CHICAGO (CP) — You can eat less and still put on weight, says a research report from the Mayo Clinic.

The report, by a group of researchers at the Mayo Clinic and Mayo Foundation in Rochester, Minn., published in the Journal of the American Medical Association, says, "There may be some truth to the often-heard statement, 'Doctor, I don't eat as much as I used to, but I have gained weight.'"

The study found that obese persons use up carbohydrate, fat and protein normally during rest and exercise. The problem is the steady decrease of calorie requirements with age. This decrease is such that obesity can develop with advancing age while exercise remains constant, even if food intake is reduced.

Exercise is important to counter-balance the decrease in calorie requirements, the researchers said.

One section of the study covered case histories of patients over a period of 35 years, during which they returned to the Mayo Clinic at intervals for physical check-ups. Their weight at the age of 30 was tabulated against weight changes during the following three decades.

The report reaffirmed once again the concept of most physicians and nutritionists that calories do count, and that exercise is an important part of a program aimed at maintaining proper weight.

Antibiotic Used Against Arthritis

NEW YORK — A co-operative study at five British medical centres has indicated that penicillamine, a cousin to the antibiotic penicillin, is effective in treating severe cases of rheumatoid arthritis, a painful and crippling chronic disease.

The British researchers, whose findings appear in the current issue of the medical journal The Lancet, said that the results were sufficiently encouraging to warrant studies of penicillamine in less severe cases of the disease.

However, they cautioned that the drug, a metabolite of penicillin, can cause serious side effects and must be used only in patients who are carefully and closely followed to detect untoward reactions.

Although there is no evidence that penicillamine can cure arthritis, the researchers believe that its continued use might halt progression of the disease and reverse some of its incapacitating symptoms.

The British study involved 105 severely ill patients, all of whom had failed to respond to currently accepted methods of treatment. The patients were randomly assigned to receive either penicillamine or a dummy capsule (placebo) that looked like the real drug. During the course of the study, neither the patients nor the doctors knew which patient was receiving the drug and which the placebo.

Premonition Helped Tribute to Truman

DEAR ABBY: On Dec. 26, just a few moments after I heard that Harry Truman had died, your CBS radio program came on and the entire program was your personal tribute to Harry Truman!

Were you in the studio at the time? I can't believe you spoke extemporaneously about Mr. Truman for five minutes without some preparation.

I was always under the impression that you taped your radio programs weeks — perhaps months — in advance of their broadcast dates.

If your tribute to Harry Truman was taped in advance, did you have a premonition (thru E.S.P. or some kind of psychic phenomenon) that Mr. Truman was going to die on that day, or was it an an incredible coincidence?

It was not only a beautiful tribute, it was interesting and informative. If you have a copy of that script, will you please publish it in your column? I would like to keep it, since Harry Truman was one of my heroes, too. CURIOUS IN L.A.

DEAR CURIOUS: My tribute to Harry Truman was taped at the Hollywood CBS radio station long before his last illness, and it was sheer coincidence that I scheduled it to be aired on the very day he died. Although I have some fairly accurate premonitions, I lay no claim to having E.S.P.

I read it from a script which I had written months ago. And here it is:

"Mr. Truman has long held a very special place in my affection. Although I do not collect autographed pictures of celebrities, there is one hanging on the wall of my den of Harry Truman.

"We never met, but we have a mutual friend — Mr. David Noyes, who collaborated with Truman on his book 'Mr. Citizen.' Mr. Noyes told me that Bess and Harry enjoyed reading Dear Abby in the Kansas City Star, whereupon I told Mr. Noyes that I was a Truman fan, too. For one thing, my late father bore a striking resemblance to Truman — particularly in photographs. Same broad smile, thinning hair, and spectacles. In addition, my father was a devoted Democrat. I can still remember the horse laughs Abe Friedman got back in Sioux City, Iowa, when he predicted that Harry Truman would beat Tom Dewey in 1948!

"SO I ASKED DAVID Noyes (who was on his way to Independence, Mo.) to ask Mr. Truman to please send me an autographed picture of himself. I received not only one picture — but TWO!

"The first bore a huge ink blot on the bottom, where Truman's old-fashioned fountain pen had leaked (about midway through the inscription), but the second picture was neatly inscribed, "With kindest personal regards to Abe's daughter from Harry Truman, July 30, 1964."

"When the name of Harry Truman is mentioned, some of his detractors will remind you that he couldn't even make a success of a little haberdashery business in Kansas City. They fail to mention (or perhaps did not know) that Harry Truman refused to file bankruptcy and let his creditors hold the bag. He paid back every cent — and it took him 10 years to do it!

"Not many people knew that after Harry's graduation from high school in Independence he received an appointment to West Point, but was rejected because of poor eyesight. However, he enlisted in the field artillery in World War I, saw action abroad, and returned a captain.

"HE MARRIED BESS Wallace, his childhood sweetheart whom he had known since he was 7 and she was 6. When they were married, Harry was 35 and Bess was 34.

"Harry went into politics in 1922 when he was elected as one of the three presiding judges of Jackson County. And while Truman was a judge, he took law courses at the Kansas City School of Law, after which he decided to run for the U.S. Senate. And he won!

"After only 10 years in the Senate, Truman was chosen by Franklin D. Roosevelt to be his running mate in 1944. Together they won, and Harry S. Truman was sworn in as vice president in January 1945. Three months later, Roosevelt died, and Harry Truman became the President of the United States.

"At his first press conference, he said to newsmen, 'Boys, if you've never prayed before . . . pray for me.'

"When history is written, I think Harry Truman will be remembered as one of our greatest Presidents."

DEAR ABBY: Before my husband and I met, he got a married woman pregnant and she had his child — a boy.

My husband and I have a daughter. How is our daughter related to that boy my husband fathered?

Would you recommend the offspring be told they have the same father? They go to the same school, and are now teen-agers, and there is a possibility of a budding romance.

All the relations know about this mess. — Mixup

DEAR MIXUP: They are half brother and sister, which is closer than the law allows for marriage. I wouldn't tell them they have the same father unless I felt it were positively necessary. The "forbidden" aspect of such a romance might enhance it.

Break-In Rash Tied to Drugs

NANAIMO — A rash of break-ins and thefts plaguing the Nanaimo area has been linked to drug addiction in the area, the head of Nanaimo RCMP detachment, Staff-Sgt. G. A. Perry said today.

Perry Monday issued a plea to residents to lock their houses — even when left vacant for only a short time — to help stem the thefts.

"There's a definite association between the thefts — there have been more house break-ins even in the middle of the day — and the numbers of addicts," he said.

Perry said over the past three weeks there have been dozens of homes broken into while occupants were away and several thousands of dollars worth of goods stolen.

Although several people have been charged with breaking and entering and taken out of circulation after conviction, the break-ins have continued.

"Each incident is thoroughly investigated and, in many cases, we are successful in catching the persons responsible," said Perry.

"But we need the help of every homeowner and resident in the area."

Beyond asking the co-operation of the people, he added, "there isn't much more we can do."

Fire Destroys Office

An office in a Douglas Street warehouse was destroyed by fire late Monday night, Saanich fire department reported today.

Damage to the business office of A. J. Forsyth, steel distributors, was estimated at $1,500. the premises are in a warehouse owned by Johnston Terminals, 3300 Douglas.

Marina Backed

Esquimalt planning committee was unanimous Monday in recommending that a proposed $1.2 million West Bay marina be treated as a special development, under a land-use contract.

The committee at an earlier meeting recommended to council that the marina bylaw be changed to allow the marina development.

The development, which includes hotel accommodation, a restaurant and cocktail lounge as well as moorage for 310 boats, ran into opposition at last week's council meeting and was referred back to committee.

Curb Space Caution

Ald. Sam Bawlf said Monday the city should make it clear that curb space could not be guaranteed to new bus tour businesses hoping to open up here.

He said city council should circulate a policy statement saying that new operators would have to take their chances finding "prime locations" for offering tourist bus rides.

His remark came in a presentation to the Central Business Advisory Committee of two city administration schemes for curing bus tour congestion on the Causeway.

The operators are understood to be coming up with their own proposal in the near future, but in case they don't, the city is prepared to enforce its own schemes, Ald. Bill Tindall told the meeting.

One of the alternatives designed by traffic engineer Dave Campbell has contracted lines (Gray and Royal Blue) working from the south side of the Empress Hotel and the "independents" working from opposite the Legislative Buildings on Belleville.

The other alternative would have the buses more or less as they are now, but clear the crosswalk opposite The Empress, and reduce the number of ticket salesmen. In both plans more emphasis would be placed on sales kiosks instead of roving touters.

Board Backs Claremont Track

Completion of the 400-metre track at Claremont senior secondary school was assured Monday night with agreement by Saanich Peninsula school board to match funds granted by Saanich municipality.

Gerry Montgomery, physical education instructor, said students had raised $16,204 toward the $28,000 project. Presentations to Saanich and Central Saanich have resulted in the promise of additional funds.

Saanich has agreed to pay about $6,000 towards the track if the school district will match the grant.

The rubberized track, which will serve 5,700 students in the district, will also be available for official meets. The track includes facilities for triple jumps, pole-vaulting and high jumping as well as a water jump for steeplechase events.

In other business, the school board will advertise for persons interested in becoming school trustees representing Saanich sector. The board is mystified, however, by the education department's instructions to take "a straw vote among the electorate."

In December a school board candidate was disqualified because of a technicality in nomination papers and the board is now one trustee short.

Education Minister Eileen Dailly has indicated that she is prepared to make an appointment and will advise results after the "straw vote" has been taken by the board.

The board will seek support from Sidney council in a request to the highways department for a sidewalk along Pat Bay Highway in Sidney area.

Foot traffic will increase in September with the opening of Parkland secondary and the student shuffle to North Saanich intermediate school, both on McDonald Park Road.

Last month a 14-year-old boy was killed while walking beside the highway south of Sidney. On Monday night chairman Rubymay Parrott emphasized the need for fenced sidewalk from Weiler Road overpass to Henry Avenue.

School superintendent Eric Lewis announced that Parkland school will accommodate grades 10 to 12 in September despite early plans to leave grade 12 students at Claremont for the 1973-74 year. It was pointed out that this is the only way to end the extended day system at Claremont and to cut bus costs.

The decision to switch north end students to Parkland will not be made mandatory, said Mrs. Parrott.

The board approved the appointment of Lyle Garroway as principal of Royal Oak junior secondary school, acting principal since the death last fall of Edward Doran.

Physician 'Incensed' by Scott Column

Dr. Brian Pound told B.C. Supreme Court Monday he was "incensed" when he read a Jack Scott column in the Victoria Times 18 months ago.

He told Mr. Justice R. A. Wootton that he re-read the column several times and contacted his lawyer.

He then wrote a letter to Times editor Brian Tobin requesting an apology or he would instruct his lawyer to "vindicate my reputation." Times publisher Stuart Underhill replied by letter that if Pound wished to comment on Scott's column, he was welcome to do so in the letters to the editor section.

Pound is claiming unspecified damages for libel in a Scott column published Aug. 13 and further reprinted by Baker, Lovick BBDO Limited and Western Direct Mail Services Limited.

He is being represented by Cecil Merritt and Graham Walker. Louis Lindholm is appearing for Scott and Victoria Press Limited and R. H. Guile is representing Baker Lovick BBDO Limited, Western Direct Mail Services Limited and R. C. Kenmuir, an employee of Baker Lovick BBDO.

UNETHICAL

Pound's action claims the defendants "falsely and maliciously" wrote about him, implying his medical knowledge was out of date, implying that he was unethical and in violation of the Hippocratic Oath, implying that his conduct was regulated by dollars and cents and that he is subject to irrationality and paranoic behavior.

The defendants have denied the claims.

Pound, who testified for one hour and 15 minutes Monday and continued today, said he studied medicine for six years at Guy's Hospital, London, before becoming a doctor in 1963.

He left the United Kingdom for Canada in December, 1966, after working for two years and eight months in several hospitals and for just over three months as a general practitioner, mostly on a relieving basis.

After quoting several parts of Scott's column including medical care in England, Merritt asked Pound why he left and came to Canada.

Because, the doctor replied, the kind of medicine available at the hands of a general practitioner was "not as I expected from my training" with GPs not permitted to admit patients to hospitals, but having to refer them to specialists.

The impression he got was a "very unfavorable one" because the full doctor-patient relationship was broken with hospital admissions handled by specialists and with specialists holding the access to diagnostic facilities in the hospitals.

In B.C., he said, he found the "most efficient" way was the constant contact with specialist and the ability to have care of his patients throughout illness and with GPs having hospital admission rights and access to diagnostic facilities.

Pound denied he has ever used the term "socialized medicine" and said the use of these words in a Victoria Times interview Aug. 10 were those of the reporter, Don Vipond.

SECOND RATE

Asked what adjective he would use to describe medicine in England, Pound said "second rate." The term "socialized medicine" would mean that a person would not be excluded from good health care because of income, that the rich should subsidize the poor.

Merritt then asked Pound what he had to say about the context of remarks that it was his right to "trade — free trade — with my customers."

Defence lawyers objected, saying that the article from which this was taken, Vipond's interview with Pound three days before Scott's column, spoke for itself and was not the subject of the suit. Mr. Justice Wootton concurred.

Asked about his comment, regarding certain provincial moves on hospital admissions and laboratories, "and if we don't like it, then it's up to us to get out," Pound told the court if people want "second rate" medicine and the doctor didn't, "he'd have no alternative but to get out."

Continuing today, Pound said he did not leave his patients when he left the United Kingdom for Canada.

Answering questions from his lawyer, he said he did not have any patients when he left.

Merritt had quoted from part of Scott's column: "apart from the background of his brief practice, Dr. Pound is in the classic tradition of such immigrants who so often justify the desertion of their nation and their patients by a paranoic attack on the British system and issue the warning that It Can Happen Here."

Pound said other quotations read from Scott's column of Aug. 13, 1971 were erroneous, incomplete and misleading.

Asked why he got in touch with Times reporter Don Vipond and gave him the interview Aug. 10, 1971, Pound said he was concerned with cabinet orders regulating laboratory privileges and doctors' privileges in hospitals.

He said he could see "the same kind of trend occurring that I complained of in England."

He felt he should "very strongly" publicize the implications of these cabinet orders.

He said he found no reference to these orders in Scott's column.

PRIVATE CITIZEN

Merritt also called Edmond Jorre de St. Jorre, a Victoria lawyer and area coroner, in a private capacity Monday.

St. Jorre said that, after reading Scott's column twice, he felt Scott "made a personal attack on the integrity" of Pound and had implied Pound had an "elastic conscience" in leaving the country which paid for his medical education.

Merritt quoted from Scott's column that getting out "does not appear to be included in the Hippocratic Oath," and asked St. Jorre what meaning he took from the Hippocratic Oath.

"I took it to mean, that if Pound was not breaching the Hippocratic Oath, he was breaching some code of ethics that should be included in the Hippocratic Oath. It put into question the medical ethics of Dr. Pound," St. Jorre replied.

Cross-examined by Lindholm, St. Jorre agreed that he is not an authority on Britain's National Health Service, but it was a subject of continuing public interest, that there are many U.K. doctors here since NHS was introduced and that they had a "deep-rooted antipathy" to NHS.

Some are obsessed against NHS, Lindholm asked.

"Some are violently opposed to it," St. Jorre replied.

Many can't say a good word about NHS?

"Yes, the majority. Yes, the great majority believe in the free enterprise system."

OBLIGATION

Asked if he felt that, if all his education was paid for by the state, he would feel a moral obligation to repay this to the community, St. Jorre said "yes, for myself, I felt I should practise in B.C."

But he disagreed with Lindholm that those who leave a nation which has given an education are "deserters" if they go elsewhere.

St. Jorre said changes in law or pressures of overpopulation could result in this.

St. Jorre agreed there is nothing in the Hippocratic Oath enjoining a doctor to leave a country that is not supplying medical services as he desires.

There would be an obligation for a doctor to remain until a replacement is found if he worked in a remote community, he said.

Asked if he has ever heard a doctor refer to his patients as "customers," St. Jorre said he hadn't and "I agree the better way is to describe them as patients."

"It smacks a little of commercialism," said Lindholm.

"In the way it was presented, yes," replied St. Jorre. "Yes, because he's using commercial terms."

WAC LIBEL SUIT MAY BE DROPPED

Premier Barrett said Monday he is "seriously considering" dropping his libel and slander suit against former premier W. A. C. Bennett.

The issue was raised in the wake of Friday's budget speech, in which Barrett hinted the government would drop suits brought by the previous government against participation in Canada's system of equalization payments. Garde Gardom (L-Vancouver-Point Grey) had asked Barrett, "What about the other suits?" to which Barrett had replied, "Perhaps."

Barrett told reporters Monday it would be correct to interpret this exchange as referring to his slander and libel suit against Bennett.

"Now that it has been raised, I can say I am seriously considering dropping the suit," the premier said.

The suit was brought against Bennett last June 16. It alleges that on June 14, Bennett "falsely and maliciously, by the words used, and by further innuendo" said Barrett "was responsible" for a violent demonstration in New Westminster June 7 in which several Social Credit cabinet ministers were assaulted.

Barrett said he would be making a decision on the suit soon, and added jokingly: " . . . as soon as I get a chance to talk to my lawyer."

Attorney-General Alex Macdonald acted as Barrett's lawyer in the filing of the suit. Macdonald sits in the chair next to Barrett's on the government side of the legislature.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

An act of "indescribable wickedness" cost a 32-year-old man a $500 fine in provincial court Monday.

Robert Bert Dixon, 1255 Garkil Road, pleaded guilty to assault causing grievous bodily harm to Ralph Eric Lormie, after a Sunday morning incident in which Dixon hit Lormie in the face with a beer glass. Lormie required 25 stitches to his face.

"Do you realize you could have disfigured this man for life?" asked the judge, who termed the accused's behavior "an act of indescribable wickedness."

YOUR HEALTH: Dr. Walter Alvarez

The Warning Signs of Croup

Many laymen use the term croup to describe a number of respiratory symptoms, especially in children. Recently I was interested to see an article by a physician on the subject in a medical journal.

What is croup? It is a number of symptoms most commonly caused by some acute inflammation of the epiglottis (the little cover which, arising in the back of the tongue, goes over the larynx, or voice-box, keeping food and other foreign material out of it), and of the bronchi (the branching tubes which conduct air into and out of the lungs).

Naturally, then, the symptoms of croup will vary with the position of the main area of inflammation.

The disease is distinguished from other inflammations by the gutteral quality of the patient's voice and the absence of hoarseness. Children older than three years of age and some adults are susceptible to this acute inflammation of the epiglottis.

The symptoms can sometimes flare up in a period of four or five hours. A diagnostic sign is the red, swollen throat; also, the child may look toxic.

The heart rate may become very rapid, and the patient may be very anxious. The child's lips may become blue and there may be a rasping cough.

One expert in the treatment of croup, says that the giving of oxygen and increased humidity can help. Antibiotics may be used, also cortisone-like drugs. In very severe cases, a tube may have to be put through a small hole cut into the trachea, to help the child to breathe.

Many a person with a damaged eardrum can get back much of his lost hearing with a transplanted eardrum. Of late, many so-called tissue banks are being established, to supply various organs to persons who can benefit from an organ transplant, and now I read that Project Hear, in Palo Alto, Calif. has been operating the first Eardrum Bank, financed by the John A. Hartford Foundation.

The "bank" has already supplied more than 300 eardrums to physicians around the United States.

City Approves Townhouses

Addition of 21 townhouses to an apartment complex earlier branded at a public meeting as "slum housing" was approved by Victoria city council's zoning committee.

Terrence Williams, architect for Niagara Apartments Ltd., told the committee a children's day-care centre which aroused criticism at an earlier zoning hearing had been abandoned. He also pointed out that some parking would be located underground in the Croft and Niagara project.

The zoning committee agreed to recommend procedures for a new land-use contract, which in the opinion of the city clerk, indicated a new public hearing on the issue.

At the same meeting a 16-storey highrise and church complex worth $1¼ million for North Park and Quadra was approved.

The complex will house 157 senior citizen residents in single units. Rents "will depend on the federal grants," according to architect Williams.

The development is financed by the First Baptist Church.

Williams said that although the tower is 16 storeys — two over the city's limit — it is under 140 feet, another city limit.

Lumbermen Put Blame for Prices On Government

Soaring lumber prices are more the result of government actions than industry policies, Council of Forest Industries president Gordon Draeseke said in Victoria today.

In a reply to a recent speech by Highways Minister Robert Strachan, Draeseke told a Kiwanis Club luncheon at the Empress:

"I would like to set the record straight and state that government policies have much more effect on lumber prices than do individual business decisions."

Strachan had said the forestry industry could expect government retaliation if prices continued to soar unchecked. Draeseke did not mention Strachan by name in his speech but industry sources said his speech was in rebuttal to Strachan's remarks.

Draeseke said U.S. government actions in cutting back on lands available for logging and bringing in profit controls had created a log shortage and forced up North American prices.

Meanwhile, in British Columbia, provincial government policies forced lumber companies to push prices up to the top American level.

He said that when the price of lumber goes up by $10, $6 goes directly to the provincial government in stumpage, plus another 70 cents to the provincial government in income and logging taxes. The federal government takes $1.40 in corporation taxes.

The $6 figure is based not on what the individual lumber company gets for its product but upon the current market level.

"So, if one operator was philanthropic enough not to raise his prices when the market went up $10, the (provincial) government would still charge him $6 stumpage," Draeseke said.

"The effect of this government policy is to force all operators to follow the market and to charge the going price.

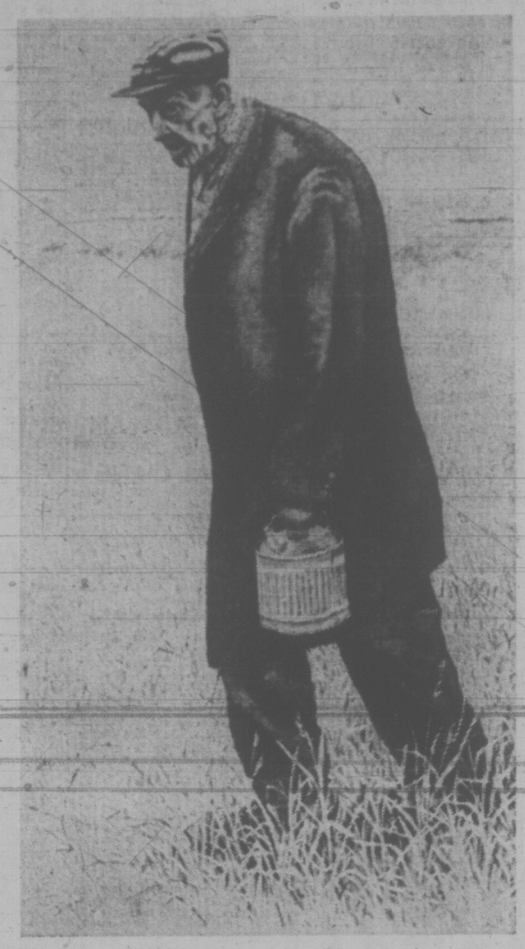
"In other words, government regulations would penalize any operator who attempted to keep his prices below the current market level."

THREE-MONTH CLOSURE AFTER SLIDES

BIG SUR, Calif. (UPI) — Cliff-hanging Highway 1 will be closed for up to three months between Carmel and the Hearst Castle because of torrential rains which washed out some stretches, authorities said Monday.

The 75-mile stretch of scenic road built on cliffs above the Pacific was hit by rockslides, mudslides and washouts during a weekend storm which dumped eight inches of rain on mountainsides denuded by fires last summer.

The slides killed one man, destroyed a building and smashed parked cars in the Big Sur area Sunday.



BLEAK AUTUMN in Saskatchewan is the subject of one of J. George Jenkins' paintings to be displayed at an exhibition opening Wednesday at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria. The display is part of the collection of Ronald Longstaffe, one of the first British Columbians to collect art on a substantial scale. Included in his collection are many works by Jenkins, a Vancouver Island artist whose paintings portray his early childhood on the prairies, along with a group of 10 graphics of Marilyn Monroe, done by Andy Warhol.

Heroin Traffickers Found Guilty

A Victoria County Court jury reached a verdict of guilty Monday for two men charged jointly with trafficking in heroin July 11.

David John Petrie, 25, and Gerald Tom Zaleschuk, 28, were convicted after a jury of seven women and five men deliberated four hours, returning once to hear evidence read back by a court reporter.

The verdict was announced at 9:30 p.m. when Judge Tyrwhitt-Drake remanded Zaleschuk to March 13 for sentence.

Petrie reappeared today and pleaded guilty to a charge of breaking and entering and theft and 16 counts of false pretences and uttering. He was remanded to Feb. 20 for sentence.

Const. Blain Froats, acting as an RCMP undercover agent, testified that he met Zaleschuk in the washroom of the Churchill Hotel at 7:30 p.m., July 11.

"He asked me for a spike," said Froats. The constable explained a "spike" was a hypodermic needle.

Froats later joined Zaleschuk for a beer.

"I asked him if he knew where I could get a cap of junk . . . When you're trying to purchase heroin, you never say the word heroin, because it's not used," he said.

Both accused left the beer parlor. Zaleschuk returned five minutes later and handed Froats one capsule of heroin.

"I left the beer parlor and went directly to my cover apartment and contacted my cover man, Const. Lush," said Froats.

Under cross-examination by defence counsel Dermod Owen-Flood, representing Zaleschuk, Const. Denis Lush said, "I was aware that Froats had been drinking but he was quite sober."

Froats admitted under cross-examination that the amount he had drunk would have affected his "powers of observation and memory."

In his address to the jury Owen-Flood said, "We know during that time he was mixing with people who would likely be hardened drinkers. Const. Froats himself has told you that he was affected by the drinks."

Oak Bay Council Supports $1.6M School Referendum

Oak Bay council has pledged its support for Greater Victoria school board's $1,664,900 building program which goes to referendum Saturday.

"The council resolved to support the referendum because it's such a small but necessary thing," said Oak Bay Mayor Francis Elford.

"It's such a minuscule amount when spread over the whole district and Oak Bay's two secondary schools are in crying need for those improvements."

Elford said she felt the installation of burglar alarm systems from referendum funds would probably save the district money in vandalism damages within a few years.

Blizzard Halts Volcano Fighters

REYKJAVIK (Reuter) — One of the most savage Arctic blizzards in many years continued to rage over Iceland today, blocking roads, cutting power and telephone lines and impeding salvage work from a recent volcanic eruption.

Two United States C-130 Hercules transport planes, sent at the request of the Icelandic government to salvage expensive fisheries machinery threatened by lava flows on Westman Island, had to turn back to their base on the mainland because snow drifts prevented them from landing.

Firemen fighting the glowing lava which has been engulfing the island since the eruption of a long-dormant volcano three weeks ago, had to give up their efforts because of the freezing weather.

They said the lava had built a seven-to-ten-yard-high wall outside the eastern part of Vestmannaeyjar, the island's principal town, and that the hot bubbling stream was only 35 yards from the outskirts of the community.

"We must try anything to stop the direction of the lava flow if the town itself is to be saved," a member of the Vestmannaeyjar town council said.

Workers used fire hoses before the water froze to cool the lava and make it harden. The hope was that the hardened mass would serve as a defensive wall against new lava streams.

Parts of the country are without electricity.

No trace has been found of 11 crew members and passengers on an Icelandic fishing vessel who took to rubber dinghies after their ship sank in a storm Sunday about 100 miles south of Iceland.

Mossy-Stemmed Trees Cleaned With Soap

The grey fungus growths on trunks of trees make a fascinating study under even a hand lens or other magnifying glass, but the average gardener looks upon them merely as a harmful disfigurement.

Sometimes growths are noticed as a green moss on the trunks of comparatively young fruit trees.

Rarely do we see either of these conditions among trees well spaced for continuoous air movement. When a complete canopy of branches prevents upward air movement, green moss or grey fungus is likely to become established. The moss is in the sadier areas, while the grey fungus (really a lichen) is often in more exposed places.

We notice this condition in forest areas of our local parks, where the tree canopy is continuous over several acres of ground.

* * *

Also in these same conditions, there is often a fairly dense ground cover, a desirable situation for preventing soil erosion and structural damage, but also holding moisture thus creating a humid atmosphere.

In gardens we see fruit trees with the growth on trunks, and noticing details carefully we will find several trees at close quarters with branches interlacing. The soil may be covered with rough grass which holds moisture summer and winter.

Or, if the garden is adjacent to a forest area where all these conditions occur, the fruit trees may become infested with a similar growth because the general area has poor air circulation.

Are they harmful? Well, the lichens and mosses both draw nutrients from their hosts, whether they are living tree trunks, rotting logs, or rock surfaces.

On trees, the growths will finally become so well established that the bark loses its hard protective structure and crumbles, leaving the trunk a prey to wind, moisture, and depredations of animals and birds.

* * *

What to do about it? In the garden, with a few trees, scrub the trunks with strong yellow soap solution and warm water. Since you are doing the job to protect the bark, avoid damage. Use either rough burlap sacking or a soft bristle brush.

Choose mild pleasant days for the work. You may need more than one session. This is a good time to start. Next year, do it over again for you may find spots where the growths reappear, trying to establish themselves again.

The real cure would be to improve the air circulation by more efficient pruning of the trees, or even the removal of one to allow for better circulation.

SOLUTION WEDNESDAY

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

In today's deal, it will become perfectly obvious, after observing the play at trick one, that East did the wrong thing. But the question to answer is why his play was wrong. As a bridge detective, it is your job to find the reason that will convict East of "conduct unbecoming a good bridge player."

Both sides vulnerable. South deals.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
3 NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♣.

It should be mentioned that South's three no-trump bid was a horrendous call. At a four-heart contract — which South should have bid — only two clubs and one diamond would have been lost.

On West's opening lead of the club five, the eight was played from dummy, and East agonized for over a minute trying to figure out whether to put up the ten or the king.

If West were leading away from the jack (say, J-x-x-x-x), then the play of the ten would force South's ace; and all South could then make in clubs would be that ace. But if East played the king, to be taken by South's (presumed) ace, then dummy's queen of clubs would be promoted into a winner.

Finally, East decided to play the ten. on the assumption that South had the ace (after all, South did bid three notrump voluntarily). South, quite naturally, made haste to win the trick with his jack. He then exposed his hand, and claimed the contract with an overtrick.

It is quite evident that if East had put up the club king, the defenders would have been enroute to cashing five club tricks. He would have come to this conclusion by looking at the set-up not through his own eyes, but through the eyes (and thoughts) of the South declarer.

Suppose you were the declarer, and had held in your hand either the A-x or the A-x-x of clubs. What would you have played from dummy on the opening lead? Would it have been the eight-spot (as was done) or would it have been the queen of clubs, in the 50-50 hope that West's opening lead had been away from the king?

Surely every declarer in the world, finding himself in the above stated position, would have put up the board's queen. Hence, did not declarer's play of the eight-spot from dummy at trick one indicate that he did not possess the ace?

RESCUE FACILITIES HIT

VANCOUVER (CP) — A marine union lawyer Monday told a formal inquiry into the sinking of the tug Haro Straits that rescue facilities in British Columbia are inadequate.

D. E. McTaggart, representing the Canadian Merchant Service Guild, said there was a three-hour gap from when the sinking was reported and when the aircraft were over the area off Point Roberts when the tug sank a year ago.

McTaggart told the inquiry rescue co-ordination facilities should be greatly upgraded.

He said Canadian helicopters are not equipped to fly at night and evidence during the week-long inquiry showed that U.S. helicopters were the only ones available after the sinking.

He said the regulations of the ministry of transport regarding tugboat safety are inadequate.

McTaggart said that if improved safety gear was aboard the Haro Straits, "who knows whether this tragedy would have occurred."

McTaggart said that a "quick release" mechanism on tow lines being installed on new tugs is not required on existing boats until 1976.

McTaggart said the guild rejected the idea that the tugboat sank after being hit by one of the two steel woodchip barges she was towing. He said she probably went down after being pulled under by her towline at the stern in the 70-knot gale.

DEVALUED DOLLAR 'JUST START'

Nixon Talking Tough on Trade

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon said today the 10 per cent devaluation of the United States dollar Monday night must be followed by tough trade legislation erecting some barriers "to get a fairer shake" for U.S. businessmen and ease that country's chronic trade deficit.

The president also indicated a sterner U.S. stance in trade talks with other countries, saying efforts will be made to erase restrictions on U.S. sales abroad.

Nixon said the legislation is needed to "get other nations away from their discriminatory policies."

"Devaluation of the dollar . . . is at best only a temporary solution" to pressure on the dollar, the president said.

He gave no specifics on his proposals but said he was "not talking about another round of lowering barriers."

"We must go up as well as down," the president said, because that is "the only way to get a fair shake for America abroad."

"Only by being able to go up" in some trade categories "will we be able to get others to come down," he said.

He and Treasury Secretary George Shultz discussed the impact of U.S. markets being flooded by foreign-produced goods and the president said that in some cases the imports can "drive a U.S. business right out of existence."

"To get a policy of freer trade we must always have in the background protection," Nixon said.

U.S. stock markets today went wild in early trading with the Dow Jones stock index jumping a record 21.60 points to 1013.17 in the first half-hour of business.

A record 15.69 million shares changed hands in the first two hours of trading on Wall Street and then slowed and prices fell slightly as profit-takers moved in.

The market closed at 996.69 on the index again of five points overall for the day.

Shultz had said in announcing the dollar devaluation Monday night that Nixon would send Congress "comprehensive trade legislation" with unspecified safeguards against disruption of domestic industries as a result of imports.

NO TIMETABLE

Nixon set no timetable for submission of the legislation.

But the package cannot go to Capital Hill before next week, since Congress is in recess.

In Ottawa, Finance Minister John Turner confirmed that the Canadian dollar will continue to float, or find its own value on foreign-exchange markets.

Turner had been advised in advance of the U.S. decision.

Trade Minister Alastair Gillespie predicted the Canadian dollar will follow the drop of the U.S. dollar in relation to other currencies.

When the U.S. last devalued its currency in December, 1971—an effective devaluation of about 11 per cent—the Canadian dollar followed more or less in step despite the publicly-expressed anticipation of U.S. officials that it would not fall as much.

RUNNING PARALLEL

On the London foreign exchange market the Canadian dollar was "running more or less parallel with the United States dollar," a banking spokesman said.

The Royal Bank of Canada here advised Canadian tourists to exchange only enough money for their immediate needs allowing several days for the market to settle down.

Generally the Canadian dollar was a little stronger than the U.S. one, closing at $100.75 in terms of U.S. funds.

OWEN NAMED LT.-GOV.

Owen, to be sworn into office March 19, replaces J. R. Nicholson, who is retiring for personal reasons.

Socred Guards Books

At a two-minute meeting this morning the NDP government took the first step in honoring a pre-election pledge of full financial accountability in the administration of the province.

For the first time in more than 20 years, an opposition MLA — Alex Fraser (SC-Cariboo) — was elected to the key job of chairing the legislature's select standing committee on public accounts and printing.

Under the former Social Credit administration the position always went to a Socred. As a result, opposition parties consistently complained they were frustrated in their efforts to call ministers before the committee and examine all government books to determine how the public's money was being spent.

The conveners of the various select standing committees are usually named chairmen but at today's first meeting of the public accounts committee when convener Chris D'Arcy (NDP—Rossland-Trail) called for nominations, Fraser was nominated by Newell Morrison (SC—Victoria) and unanimously elected.

Roy Cummings (NDP—Little Mountain) was elected secretary.

SPILL COMMITTEE

Jim Gorst (NDP-Esquimalt) was elected chairman of the legislature's special committee on oil spills.

Harold Steeves (NDP-Richmond) was elected secretary of the committee at its organizational meeting.

The committee was established earlier this session by Premier Barrett to look into the problem of oil transportation through B.C. coastal waters.

Six other select standing committees also held their first organizational meetings today and the posts of chairman and secretaries chosen in each case were NDP.

Forestry and fisheries: chairman, Robert Skelly (Alberni), secretary, Don Lockstead (MacKenzie).

Mining and railways: chairman, Graham Lee (Prince Rupert); secretary, Alf Nunweiler (Fort George).

Labor: chairman, Colin Gablemann (North Vancouver-Seymour); secretary, Graham Lea.

Agriculture: chairman, Gerry Anderson (Kamloops); secretary, Lorne Nicolson (Nelson-Creston).

The Naked Truth

A Vancouver Island school teacher took some pictures of crows in the trees near the legislature Monday afternoon. He also shot pictures of a lark.

"I was poising my camera when I suddenly saw naked flesh. I couldn't believe it."

Two teenage boys, about 16, had climbed the tree and stripped naked.

"I thought it just couldn't be true, especially not in Victoria," he said. So he took pictures of the event for posterity.

The teacher, who said he would prefer his name not be used, said he was at the buildings with his class Monday afternoon for a tour of the legislature.

While the students were on a guided tour, the teacher decided to take pictures of some of Victoria's more spectacular sights.

"I heard some crows cawing up the tree and I thought that might make a good picture," he said.

"But when I looked up . . . I almost dropped my camera.

"I guess they climbed up and then took their clothes off. It was quite chilly."

Temperature at 1:30 p.m. was a cool 47 degrees.

Later the boys came down, getting dressed on the way.

They gave no explanation for their tree-top cavorting.

The incident was not on the police blotter today, indicating that nobody complained.

When told about the incident, one passerby commented: "Naked up a tree? Must have been taxpayers!"

Pollution Fixing Costs Ford $7M

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Ford Motor Co. was fined $7 million today on charges that its employees illegally tampered with 1973 Ford cars undergoing anti-pollution tests, the U.S. justice department said.

At the same time, the company in Detroit and Oakville announced record earnings for both the Canadian and U.S. operations.

Ford filed a no-contest plea to a 350-count criminal information, filed in the U.S. District Court in Detroit by the justice department, and signed a consent decree concluding a civil suit.

The court proposed the maximum fine of $3.5 million in the criminal case. It also approved a $3.5 million penalty agreed to by Ford and the government in the civil case.

In addition, Ford was enjoined from committing similar violations in the future. The matter goes back to last April and May when Ford submitted its anti-pollution test data required for federal certification of its 1973 cars.

On May 16, the firm withdrew its application and told the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) they had been based on tests which included unauthorized and previously unreported maintenance.

The Clean Air Act and EPA regulations make it a criminal offence knowingly to submit false information on testing and reporting of maintenance on prototype engines.

The criminal information charged Ford with making four false reports to the EPA in its applications for certification of four sizes of engines.

The criminal action contained 346 counts specifying engine maintenance that was not reported such as installing new spark plugs, regapping spark plugs, resetting ignitiin timing, replacing points and cleaning carburetors.

Ford in Detroit reported sales and net income reached all-time highs.

Worldwide dollar sales for Ford was $20.2 billion, up 23 per cent from sales of $16.4 billion in 1971.

Henry Ford II, board chairman, and Lee Iacocca, president, reported consolidated net income hit a record $870 million in 1972, compared with $657 million in 1971, and the previous record of $703 million in 1965.

They said earnings equalled $8.52 a share last year, up 38 per cent from the $6.18 a share earned in 1971 and a 35-per-cent increase over the previous high of $6.33 a share in 1965.

In Oakville, Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. consolidated net income after taxes in 1972 was $101,600,000 or $12.25 a share, up 34 per cent from $75,800,000 and $9.14 in the previous year.

Consolidated sales rose to a record $3,084 million from $2,468 in 1971. They include the company's Canadian operations and those in overseas subsidiaries in Australia, South Africa, New Zealand and Singapore. Sales to the U.S. parent company also were included for the first time.

Canadian sales, including those to Ford in the U.S., increased 26 per cent to $2,378 million from $1,895 million.

Net income from Canadian operations totalled $90,500,000, a 69-per-cent jump from $53,400,000 in 1971.

POSTIES VOTING ON NEW CONTRACT

OTTAWA (CP) — Postal workers will decide today and Wednesday whether to endorse or reject a tentative contract settlement worked out three weeks ago between union and government negotiators.

As voting began the 28,000 members of the Council of Postal Unions were weighing statements by their leaders for and against the proposals.

Results of the vote are expected Thursday or Friday.

Acceptance of the tentative agreement will mean an end to threats of a legal nationwide postal strike until 1975. Contract talks began a year ago and the last working agreement expired in March.

James McCall, a co-chairman of the council, said Monday he was hoping for a heavy turnout by the postal workers.

Alaska Fights Ruling

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Alaska will ask the United States Supreme Court to review a lower-court ruling that has blocked construction of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline, Gov. William Egan says.

Construction was sidetracked last Friday by a ruling of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

The state also will ask the interior department to shift to Alaska control of the 789-mile pipeline corridor from the arctic North Slope to the southern port of Valdez, Egan said Monday.

Meanwhile, Alaska Senators Ted Stevens and Mike Gravel said they plan to introduce legislation to permit construction of the line.

Hanoi Frees Canadian

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Marc Cayer, one of two Canadians held as prisoners of war by North Vietnam, has been released in Hanoi, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp told the Commons today.

Cayer was captured in Vietnam during the 1968 Tet offensive.

Sharp said he had been released into the custody of the Canadian representative at Hanoi.

The minister said Cayer was well and in good spirits and arrangements were being made to return the prisoner home.

Sharp made no reference to Lloyd Oppel of Courtenay, B.C., the second Canadian prisoner in North Vietnam who was captured in Laos last fall.

Meanwhile, North Vietnam has agreed to release 20 more prisoners of war within the next few days, the Pentagon announced today.

The surprise release will raise to 163 the number of Americans freed by Hanoi and the Viet Cong.

Preliminary medical examinations today showed the 142 prisoners freed Monday are in generally good health.

Two of them may fly to the United States today to be at the bedsides of critically-ill relatives.

EXPERTS SEE RECESSION

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States is almost unavoidably headed for an economic recession later this year or early in 1974, two economists said today.

"Indeed, the challenge facing policy makers in the coming year will be to avoid a recession of classic dimension," said Wildred Lewis Jr., chief economist for the National Planning Association, Washington.

Henry Kaufman, an economist with Salmon Brothers, New York, told the joint economic committee, "late this year, or no later than early 1974, the real rate of economic growth may be only a small fraction of the current high rate, and a complete lack of real growth for a short time span cannot be entirely ruled out."

Lewis and Kaufman disagreed somewhat on the fine points of what could be done about it, but their central theme was the same: The economy is booming at such a pace now that inflation is inevitable, and inflation will lead to recession.

Kaufman said an "enormously stimulative fiscal and monetary expansion" had fired up an economic boom, but that steps had not been taken to assure that the boom could be controlled before inflation sets in.

"Now we are in the midst of an economic boom, moving to even higher utilization of real resources with the U.S. unemployment rate falling perhaps to 4.5 per cent by mid-year," Kaufman said.

"If additional excesses are to be avoided and the boom is to continue, checking inflation is necessary but extremely dif-

'It Gets Pretty High' When Gases Waft Around

Ventilation and fire hazards were found in 1969 study

Lab Work a Real Headache

Victoria Times
TUESDAY, FEB. 13, 1973 17
SECOND SECTION

The chemistry lab at Mount View senior secondary has no ventilation system and sometimes as many as 20 students perform experiments which release poisonous gases into the small room.

The biology labs at the school are also without ventilation and the smell of formaldehyde often leaves students with headaches and nausea.

The physics lab has uncovered electrical outlets dangerously close to where students do their experiments.

At Mount View they need $72,000 to rectify these and other fire and laboratory safety hazards.

The money for renovations is part of Greater Victoria school board's $1,664,900 building program which goes to referendum Saturday.

Eight other schools in the district will benefit from referendum money and most of the projects deal with existing safety hazards.

"Actually, to put in any kind of adequate lab, we'd have to have a whole new room and it would take more money than the whole referendum," explained Mount View chemistry teacher Tom Hatcher.

He pointed out a small, unventilated storage room for all the lab's chemicals and said that with so many flammable materials stored together, metal fire retardant cabinets are a necessity the school does not have.

"There's no ventilation in lab itself either," Hatcher said.

"Imagine what it's like when 30 kids with 15 beakers experiment with silver and produce nitric oxide — it gets pretty high.

"The only ventilation is to open windows," Hatcher said, "and take your chances with pneumonia."

The school's two biology labs, situated in annexes, have small storage rooms with no fire resistant cabinets and only one exit in each.

"We should have two doors in these storage preparation rooms, according to safety regulations," said biology teacher Ted Sarkissian. "If there's a fire there should be two ways out."

"There have really been surprisingly few accidents in schools," said Mount View principal Robert Hunter, "when you consider what look like potentially hazardous situations."

Hunter agreed that most of the planned renovations were basically patch-work measures.

The problem in most secondary school science labs is that curriculum has changed and progressed rapidly while the facilities have not been able to change in tune with more advanced studies.

Mount Douglas senior secondary, Oak Bay senior secondary and Oak Bay junior secondary also need referendum funds for laboratory safety.

Seven of the nine schools also need fire safety improvements.

At Mount View, fire walls, new exit doors, wider staircases, smoke doors and improvements to the fire alarm system are to be instituted if the referendum goes through.

Many of the safety improvements recommended stem from a 1969 report by the B.C. Research Council.

That report, commissioned by the school board following an explosion in a school lab, criticized the fact that many labs, such as the ones at Mount View, are built in classrooms not meant for laboratory work.

Unsafe storage of chemicals, poor ventilation, insufficient exits, absence of safety equipment and lack of student discipline also came under fire in the report.

The school board acted on several of the report's recommendations immediately, according to board spokesmen, but many of the needed renovations cost a great deal of money and had to wait for referendum approval.

'Horrendous' Increases Seen in Apartment Rent

Proposed legislation which will take the lid off assessments on commercial properties, including apartment buildings, could result in apartment renters paying "horrendous rent increases."

Previously all real estate has been subject to a 10 per cent annual limit. Amendments to the Assessment Equalization Act presented by Premier Dave Barrett Friday could send commercial, municipal and school taxes rocketing by up to 300 per cent, according to some sources.

"Don't write a story saying we're going to up the rents" in response to assessment jumps, said Wes Dickie, president of the Apartment Owners Association, "but the increase in assessment will have to be passed on."

It's estimated half the population here lives in apartments.

Besides the increase in rent —which in some cases could go as high as $9.50 per suite per month—Dickie said long-term effects of the legislation on apartment owners will be disastrous.

"The effect of this legislation will be horrendous. We've seen the results in scores of American cities," said Dickie.

"Square miles of apartments are abandoned by owners. Once you make it so tough for the owner that he can't make a profit from the property, he'll get out of the business.

"In some cases he'll let it go back to the municipality for taxes, claim inequity and only then can he get out from under the burden.

"This thing goes on and on. Once one building goes it spreads to others. The municipality loses taxes from one building, there's a smaller tax base and it makes it more difficult for other properties. It's a horrible situation."

Chamber of Commerce president Terry Farmer says the legislation is inevitable, and the only way to prevent many businessmen from going bankrupt is for the city to establish a lower commercial mill rate.

"The city must act promptly or a lot of businessmen, particularly smaller businessmen are going to go bankrupt under the impact of these taxes," Farmer told a Monday meeting of the Central Business Advisory Committee.

Farmer said property taxes for an average Victoria merchant would increase by 43 per cent if the proposed legislation is passed.

"Many businessmen already have a difficult time staying in business," Farmer said. "The onus is clearly on the city to stagger the blow."

DICKIE
. . . fears long-term effect

The committee resolved to so recommend to city council.

Assessments are supposed to be made on 50 per cent of a property's market value. However, the former five and 10 per cent ceilings imposed by the Socred government, combined with zooming property values have left assessments lagging far behind true values.

Farmer said most commercial assessments in Victoria stand at about 35 per cent of market value. With removal of the ceiling, the 50 per cent assessment becomes mandatory.

Farmer said it could mean a $900 annual tax leap on a property valued at about $100,000 for land and improvements.

Farmer said the amendments to the act as introduced by the premier were unclear in their wording. They made an exemption of properties "used for residential purposes or classified as farmland"—did this mean apartments were exempted?

Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer confirmed later in an interview that apartments were not exempted. Lorimer said some apartment owners would end up paying more taxes if their properties were undervalued and others would pay less if their properties were overvalued.

Lorimer said it was not the intention of the government to make anyone pay "one cent more" than they have under existing legislation.

He said the intention of the amendments was to spread out evenly the assessments on land and improvements.

Meanwhile the city will benefit from the legislation, if it comes into effect.

City assessor Alf Joyce said 50 per cent assessments would mean a big jump in revenue if no separate mill rate for commercial, industrial and apartment land is introduced.

Semi-Mall Proposed For Broad

Organizers of the week-long Victoria Days celebrations now want to close off Broad Street in downtown Victoria instead of Douglas Street.

Downtown Business Association spokesman Don Nixon today told city council's public works committee Broad Street could be made into what he called a semi-mall.

This meant allowing traffic on the street but banning parking and partially filling the road with stalls, stands and side-shows.

He said emphasis could be placed on Centennial Square, which lies at the end of Broad Street, where dances and shows could be held.

Aldermen approved the scheme in principle, although Ald. Sam Bawlf was afraid that if it was mis-handled it might jeopardize the city's plans for making a permanent traffic-free mall on Government and View streets.

Victoria Days take place May 22-27.

Sweet Smell of Sex Deadly Beetle Lure

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

Bark beetles in B.C. may in future find themselves lured to destruction by the sweet smell of sex.

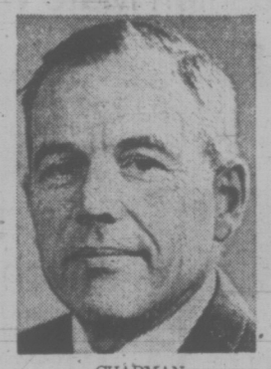
Scientists at the Pacific Forest Research Centre in Victoria are experimenting with synthetic chemical attractants which duplicate the natural lures used by female insects to attract a crowd.

Bark beetles are a plague to the lumber industry because they kill the trees they burrow in to make nests. In one recent 10-year span it's estimated over a billion cubic feet of spruce timber in the province were destroyed by the spruce bark beetle.

Dr. John Chapman, an entomologist at the federal research laboratory, explains that the beetles settle into the nutritionally rich outer sapwood and inner bark, boring long galleries for their batches of eggs. The grubs fan out in their foraging, girdling and destroying the tree.

The first female beetles to attack a tree produce the chemicals which not only attract males but more females. Unless there are enough beetles to kill the tree it will heal and the resin it produces will hamper brood development.

Chapman says the value of the synthetic attractants, first developed in Texas, is still debatable but is promising.



CHAPMAN
. . . promising results

Among ways they might be used on the spruce bark beetle:

—Tricking beetles into attacking the wrong size or species of tree with resulting brood failure.

—Baiting trees ready for logging so the attracted beetles would be destroyed.

—Spreading the chemical signal so widely in the forest the beetles would be confused and lose their ability to concentrate on a few trees.

—Attracting beetles to trees which have been treated with an insecticide to kill them or to trees treated with a chemical so they are unsuitable for brood development.

—Baiting trees around windfall patches or logging slash to hold populations there.

It may all sound simple enough but it hasn't proved to be. Earlier research in California showed, after a lot of work, that the species of beetle under investigation there produced three different chemicals which had to be combined to be effective.

Chapman says another problem is the limited range of the attractants, which means bait centres have to be set up at frequent intervals.

Another problem is the beetles' predators respond to the baits and can be affected where insecticides are being used.

Because the chemicals are custom-made at the moment, they are expensive. One of them, for example, costs $1,200 for a little less than a pint. But 10 drops of it will bait a tree formost of a season.

The research centre will have a team of researchers in the field about the beginning of April, said Chapman. They will be mostly based at a station south of Prince George where testing will continue through to September.

'Recognition First' was the plea of picketers

'It's a Long Way to Freedom' Independent Schools Chorus

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

More than 100 school children, sporting knee socks, blazers and school ties, picketed the Legislative Buildings this morning, singing "It's a Long Way to Freedom."

They came from St. Andrew's, St. Patrick's, St. Joseph's and St. Ann's independent schools, and they were there to support a delegation from the Federation of Independent Schools Association who met with the cabinet at 11.15 a.m.

FISA is seeking government recognition for 140 independent schools in B.C. and after many years of fighting is finally getting a hearing from the province.

"I think we'll get a fair hearing," said FISA spokesman Jerry Ensing.

"We want recognition first," he said. "We know it's not NDP policy to support financing so we'll just talk about that and hope to get it later."

Premier Barrett said this morning before entering a cabinet meeting that it has been party policy of the NDP for some time that the government not provide financial aid to independent schools.

"We can't give them a change of party policy," the premier said. "How successful they are depends on how successful they are within the party."

The FISA brief presented to cabinet argues that in modern society man "must acknowledge the validity of differing philosophies of education that can never be contained within the unitary, neutral public system."

The independent schools, which represent about 23,000 students in B.C. say they want legal recognition so that: students can transfer freely between schools, their teachers can have access to seniority and pension benefits, students can have access to educational services, all post-secondary institutions and equal graduation rights.

Sister Shiela Moss from St. Ann's Academy, spokesman for demonstrating students, said the schools feel it is unfair that their parents have to pay twice for education, once through taxes and once through school fees.

She said she didn't see the demise of independent schools if no government financing is offered but added that enrolment in these schools has been declining and financing is a large part of the reason.

One angry young student in the crowd summed up the students' feelings by saying: "My parents have the right by the Human Rights Act to send me to school where ever they want. Why should they have to pay twice?"

Retirement Plan Like Interest-Free Loan

By C. DAVID WEYMAN
Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co.

Everybody's ambition in life is to save income tax and everybody — well, nearly everybody — has a chance to do so.

The secret is to contribute to a retirement income plan but there are still people around who are not in on this.

The way it works is that the contributions made to the retirement income plan are deducted in calculating taxable income so that income taxes are saved now, and the retirement income is included in taxable income when it is received in the future.

This has two advantages. First, the retirement income may be taxed at a lower tax rate than current income is, because income levels tend to fall after retirement. But don't count on tax rates not increasing by then.

Secondly, and much more significant, a part of the investment in the retirement income plan is money which would otherswe be paid away as current income tax. So the government is making part of the annual contribution — it is like an interest-free loan.

There are two important kinds of plan which qualify for this favourable tax treatment, a registered pension plan and a registered retirement savings plan.

It was probably the tax advantages which at first led companies to have a registered pension plan. These advantages were and still are:

—The employer's contribution is not a taxable benefit to the employee.

—The employee's contribution is deductible by him in calculating taxable income.

A registered pension plan may be set up as non-contributory—the employer pays all—or it may require the employees to contribute and may even permit them to make voluntary contributions. Contributions normally relate to current services rendered by the employees but may also be made on account of past services.

Contributions in respect of current services must be withheld from the employees' salary or wages or paid as part of their union dues. Contributions on account of past services may be paid by the employees directly.

The tax reform increased the annual limit for tax deductible contributions to a registered pension plan from $1,500 to $2,500 per employee in respect of current services. Both the employer and employee are subject to this limit.

In addition, the employee can contribute a further $2,500 in a year in respect of services rendered by him in a previous year of employment with the company before he became a contributor to the pension plan. And if, under the old tax system, he contributed the maximum $1,500 for each year before he became a contributor to the plan, the new tax system permits this to be increased to $2,500.

By contrast, a registered retirement savings plan is a personal retirement income plan. Many people think that it is available only for the self-employed but this is wrong—employees can also save tax sometimes by contributing to an RRSP and so can those receiving rental income.

With the increase in the maximum tax deductible contribution under the tax reform to $4,000, an RRSP is now a very significant way to save income tax and provide for retirement. Those eligible are remiss if they pass up this opportunity.

And if money is borrowed to make the contribution, keep track of the interest paid because it can be deducted in calculating taxable income.

INCOME TAX SAVING

Earnings	Maximum RRSP Contribution	Out of Pocket Cost	Tax Saving
$5,000	$1,000	$766	$234
10,000	2,000	1,427	573
15,000	3,000	1,958	1,042
20,000	4,000	2,295	1,705
25,000	4,000	2,215	1,785
30,000	4,000	2,091	1,909

The annual contribution limits are:

—Self-employed and employees who do not belong to a registered pension plan—20% of earnings up to a maximum of $4,000;

—Employees who belong to a registered pension plan—20% of earnings up to a maximum of $2,500 for the employee's combined contributions to the registered pension plan and the RRSP.

The difference between the $4,000 and $2,500 limits reflects the fact that if an employee belongs to a registered pension plan, his employer is also contributing up to $2,500 a year to this plan on his account.

"Earnings" include salaries, wages, pension benefits, retiring allowances, business profits and net real estate rental income for the purpose of determining the maximum RRSP contribution.

To be deductible in your 1972 tax return, contributions to an RRSP must have been made during 1972 or within the first 60 days of 1973. The deadline is therefore March 1, 1973. If contributions made from January 1, 1973 to March 1, 1973 exceed the 1972 limit, the excess can be deducted in your 1973 tax return.

The accompanying chart shows how the maximum contribution to an RRSP increases to $4,000 for a self-employed person or an employee who does not belong to a registered pension plan.

The chart also shows how the tax saving increases as contributions and earnings increase or, putting it another way, how the out-of-pocket cost of contributing decreases relative to the total contribution.

The big question then is what kind of RRSP to buy and where to go to get one. one.

One kind of RRSP athat is available is offered by the life insurance companies and it involves registering the cash surrender value or savings portion of a life insurance policy.

Some life insurance policies are backed by what is called a segregated fund of equity investments. If the savings portion of one of these policies is registered, you will have a retirement savings plan with a value that will rise and fall with the fortunes of its investments.

Otherwise, you can make a direct payment to a registered retirement savings plan offered by a trust company, life insurance company, investment dealer or mutual fund.

These plans come with three options:

— Guaranteed plan — your contributions are guaranteed plus a reasonable interest rate There is no risk involved.

— Income plan — your contributions are invested in fixed-income investments such as bonds, mortgages and preferred shares to give you good security of capital and a high long-term interest rate.

— Equity plan — you contributions are invested in common shares to give long-term capital gains which will be a hedge against inflation. The value of this plan rises and falls with the stock market.

If they are going to buy into an equity plan, they may also compare investment management performance over perhaps the last five years. And, like any investor, they would try and time their contributions during the year when the stock market was down, perhaps borrowing the money to spread the cost.

Finally, if you own investments which qualify under the new regulations, you can contribute them at their current value to a self-administered RRSP. No cash outlay is involved but you still get the tax deduction. There is a question as to whether the transfer of the investments into the RRSP triggers capital gains and losses, but nobody knows for sure— not even the tax department.

Tungsten Discovered By Amex

VANCOUVER (CP) — Amax Exploration Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Amax (American Metals Climax Inc.) of New York, reports it has identified a huge tungsten deposit on the Yukon-Northwest Territories border about 240 miles northeast of Whitehorse.

Company officials said here the deposit is about five miles northwest of the Canol Road in the MacMillan Pass area. The company said more than 30 million tons of tungsten-bearing rock have been outlined with an average grade of 0.9 per cent tungsten trioxide.

Amex plans additional drilling and bulk sampling in an effort to determine true tonnage and grades.

Richmond Curlers Sweep Into Brier

NELSON (CP) — Jack Tucker of Richmond Winter Club won the British Columbia curling championship Monday by defeating Rod Carmichael of Fernie 8-6 for a sweep of the best-of-three series.

Tucker, 32-year-old airlines pilot, won the opening game earlier Monday 9-7 and now advances to the Canadian championship March 5-10 at Edmonton.

His rink consists of lead Gerry Peckham, second Jim Armstrong, and third Bernie Sparkes, who has competed in five national finals and last year skipped the B.C. entry.

Armstrong, a graduate of Esquimalt Secondary School now in his second year of dentistry at University of British Columbia, threw third rocks for Tucker when the rink won the Playland Cashpiel last November. Sparkes did not curl in the Playland event.

In the second game of the provincial final, Carmichael stole one on the eighth end to go ahead 6-5. Tucker blanked the ninth end to retain last rock and drew for one in the 10th to tie it 6-6.

On the 11th, Carmichael was light with last rock and Tucker stole two to take the lead. Carmichael ran out of rocks on the 12th.

In the first game, Tucker broke a 5-5 tie with three in the ninth, and was never headed.

Can There Be Happiness In 'Island Cup' Matches?

If measured by popularity with the competitors, the Inter-Club League matches for the Willie Park Driver are "numero uno" in the eyes of the district's golfers.

There is no intention of competing for popularity, but Al Zimmerman has an idea which could generate added entertainment and excitement for Vancouver Island golfers.

It is worth discussing because, while designated as competition, it can be achieved without adding another load to the already-overburdened course schedules.

He's had his fling as a tour pro and, from pro shops in Portland and Seattle, has served the Pacific Northwest well. Zimmerman has had numerous tastes of glory but he can't recall a "more entertaining or enjoyable year of golfing" than was his fortune last year.

Recovered from a serious illness, the not-so-retired pro, at 64, almost won the Times Island Open (losing on the 37th hole to Vaughan Trapp), and pocketed change from more than a half-dozen tournaments.

Success notwithstanding, the fellowship and overall attitude provided the greatest pleasure, and it's not beneath Zimmerman's dignity to return some of the kindness. He's doing it with an idea. Two ideas, if you want to count plans for a new invitational tournament at Glen Meadows.

Glen Meadows invitational is still in the idea machine. (They're talking of bringing the top four amateurs from every club on the Island to compete as a team, probably over 36 holes. More on that later, if time and interest warrants it.)

★ ★ ★

More appealing at the moment is Zimmerman's suggestion of a "Vancouver Island Cup" series. Borrowing from the blueprints of the Ryder and Hudson Cup matches, the Island Cup match would pit the 10 top professionals against the 10 top amateurs.

Selection would be made, Zimmerman suggests, on a point system from appearances in the many Island tournaments. The point system can be set up to cover both medal and match-play tournaments.

With 20 golfers playing off, only five starting times would have to be borrowed from a club. Make it 10 teeoff times if Al gets his wish and a 36-hole playoff is decreed. A two-day confrontation is preferred because singles can make up one day's play and the alwayys-entertaining scotch foursomes can account for the second engagement.

The point system would stimulate appearance of "the best" in the many Island tournaments. The suggested list includes the Island Open, the City Amateur, and the various opens such as Cedar Hill, Cowichan, Esquimalt, Nanaimo, Alberni and etc.

★ ★ ★

Also considered is the thought the matches could prove appealing to spectators. The idea of head-to-head confrontation between professional and amateur is attractive.

The affair could be sponsored easily enough. With only 20 golfers to "honor" at the final callover, it could be a low-budget promotion yet the interest, because of the point-accumulation system, would be sustained over the entire summer season.

The Victoria and District Committee's annual meeting comes up March 1. The business should be routine, and if Zimmerman doesn't make it back from Hawaii by that date, then I'd like to see someone carry his suggestion to the Committee.

There is a great deal of merit in Zim's offering.

Marg Mainwaring's 20-point performance led Oak Bay and Kathy Wilkinson had 12 points for Esquimalt.

Ball Lockout 'Illegal'

NEW YORK (AP) — Marvin Miller, denouncing an "illegal threat of a lockout" by major league baseball clubs, said Monday player representatives would meet Friday to discuss the owners' lastest offer.

Miller, the executive director of the Major League Baseball Players Association, indicated the player representatives probably would take the proposal to the entire membership.

The owners, in making their latest offer last Thursday, announced they were postponing early spring training which was to have opened Wednesday for invited players, usually pitchers and catchers.

Miller, however, said that spring training does not technically start until March 1, the date set out in all player contracts.

". . . We have only a threat of a lockout by the owners," said Miller, "but even that threat is illegal under the Taft-Hartley Act, because in the context of the present facts it constitutes a violation of the owners' duty to bargain in good faith."

Miller said there "has not at any time during these negotiations been a strike threat by the players, nor is there one now."

Miller declined to give his opinion of the 12-page proposal made by the owners last Thursday, but did score what owners' representative John Gaherin termed a landmark proposal calling for arbitration in settling individual salary disputes.

In criticizing what he called "this worthless arbitration proposal," Miller said a player could not seek arbitration of his contract two straight years.

Miller also said that the arbitration proposal stated that the current maximum salary-cut provision would not pertain to players eligible for arbitration — those with three years in the major leagues.

"The year after arbitration, a player could be cut to nothing," said Miller.

He also was scornful of a point in the arbitration proposal which, he said, states that an arbitratorin reaching a decision could not consider the financial status of a player, any testimonials to a player's ability, prior offers to the player and the salaries of other baseball players or players in other sports.

Other issues involved in the negotiations include minimum salaries, a pension-benefit plan and the controversial reserve clause which binds a player to a club until he is released, traded or retires.

City Approves Townhouses

Addition of 21 townhouses to an apartment complex earlier branded at a public meeting as "slum housing" was approved by Victoria city council's zoning committee.

Terrence Williams, architect for Niagara Apartments Ltd., told the committee a children's day-care centre which aroused criticism at an earlier zoning hearing had been abandoned. He also pointed out that some parking would be located underground in the Croft and Niagara project.

The zoning committee agreed to recommend procedures for a new land-use contract, which in the opinion of the city clerk, indicated a new public hearing on the issue.

At the same meeting a 16-storey highrise and church complex worth $1¼ million for North Park and Quadra was approved.

The complex will house 157 senior citizen residents in single units. Rents "will depend on the federal grants," according to architect Williams.

The development is financed by the First Baptist Church.

Williams said that although the tower is 16 storeys — two over the city's limit — it is under 140 feet, another city limit.

Lumbermen Put Blame for Prices On Government

Soaring lumber prices are more the result of government actions than industry policies, Council of Forest Industries president Gordon Draeseke said in Victoria today.

In a reply to a recent speech by Highways Minister Robert Strachan, Draeseke told a Kiwanis Club luncheon at the Empress:

"I would like to set the record straight and state that government policies have much more effect on lumber prices than do individual business decisions."

Strachan had said the forestry industry could expect government retaliation if prices continued to soar unchecked. Draeseke did not mention Strachan by name in his speech but industry sources said his speech was in rebuttal to Strachan's remarks.

Draeseke said U.S. government actions in cutting back on lands available for logging and bringing in profit controls had created a log shortage and forced up North American prices.

Meanwhile, in British Columbia, provincial government policies forced lumber companies to push prices up to the top American level.

He said that when the price of lumber goes up by $10, $6 goes directly to the provincial government in stumpage, plus another 70 cents to the provincial government in income and logging taxes. The federal government takes $1.40 in corporation taxes.

The $6 figure is based not on what the individual lumber company gets for its product but upon the current market level.

"So, if one operator was philanthropic enough not to raise his prices when the market went up $10, the (provincial) government would still charge him $6 stumpage," Draeseke said.

"The effect of this government policy is to force all operators to follow the market and to charge the going price.

"In other words, government regulations would penalize any operator who attempted to keep his prices below the current market level."

THREE-MONTH CLOSURE AFTER SLIDES

BIG SUR, Calif. (UPI) — Cliff-hanging Highway 1 will be closed for up to three months between Carmel and the Hearst Castle because of torrential rains which washed out some stretches, authorities said Monday.

The 75-mile stretch of scenic road built on cliffs above the Pacific was hit by rockslides, mudslides and washouts during a weekend storm which dumped eight inches of rain on mountainsides denuded by fires last summer.

The slides killed one man, destroyed a building and smashed parked cars in the Big Sur area Sunday.

BLEAK AUTUMN in Saskatchewan is the subject of one of J. George Jenkins' paintings to be displayed at an exhibition opening Wednesday at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria. The display is part of the collection of Ronald Longstaffe, one of the first British Columbians to collect art on a substantial scale. Included in his collection are many works by Jenkins, a Vancouver Island artist whose paintings portray his early childhood on the prairies, along with a group of 10 graphics of Marilyn Monroe, done by Andy Warhol.

Heroin Traffickers Found Guilty

A Victoria County Court jury reached a verdict of guilty Monday for two men charged jointly with trafficking in heroin July 11.

David John Petrie, 25, and Gerald Tom Zaleschuk, 28, were convicted after a jury of seven women and five men deliberated four hours, returning once to hear evidence read back by a court reporter.

The verdict was announced at 9:30 p.m. when Judge Tyrwhitt-Drake remanded Zaleschuk to March 13 for sentence.

Petrie reappeared today and pleaded guilty to a charge of breaking and entering and theft and 16 counts of false pretences and uttering. He was remanded to Feb. 20 for sentence.

Const. Blain Froats, acting as an RCMP undercover agent, testified that he met Zaleschuk in the washroom of the Churchill Hotel at 7:30 p.m., July 11.

"He asked me for a spike," said Froats. The constable explained a "spike" was a hypodermic needle.

Froats later joined Zaleschuk for a beer.

"I asked him if he knew where I could get a cap of junk . . . When you're trying to purchase heroin, you never say the word heroin, because it's not used," he said.

At 8:25 p.m. Petrie entered the beer parlor and Zaleschuk went over to speak with him.

Froats then paid Petrie $15 and he said he had to go out to his car to gt the heroin.

Both accused left the beer parlor. Zaleschuk returned five minutes later and handed Froats one capsule of heroin.

"I left the beer parlor and went directly to my cover apartment and contacted my cover man, Const. Lush," said Froats.

Under cross-examination by defence counsel Dermod Owen-Flood, representing Zaleschuk, Const. Denis Lush said, "I was aware that Froats had been drinking but he was quite sober."

In his address to the jury Owen-Flood said, "We know during that time he was mixing with people who would likely be hardened drinkers. Const. Froats himself has told you that he was affected by the drinks."

Oak Bay Council Supports $1.6M School Referendum

Oak Bay council has pledged its support for Greater Victoria school board's $1,664,900 building program which goes to referendum Saturday.

"The council resolved to support the referendum because it's such a small but necessary thing," said Oak Bay Mayor Francis Elford.

"It's such a minuscule amount when spread over the whole district and Oak Bay's two secondary schools are in crying need for those improvements."

Elford said she felt the installation of burglar alarm systems from referendum funds would probably save the district money in vandalism damages within a few years.

Bilingualism Grants Total $167.8M

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government spent $167.8 million between Jan. 1, 1970, and Dec. 31, 1972, on programs administered by the secretary of state's department under the federal bilingualism development program.

The information was contained in a written reply in the Commons Monday by Secretary of State Hugh Faulkner to a question from Robert Coates (PC-Cumberland-Colchester North).

Between Jan. 1, 1970, and March 31, 1972, the breakdown in grants under the program to provinces and provincial institutions was: Newfoundland $326,204, Prince Edward Island $246,895, Nova Scotia $1.7 million, New Brunswick $10.5 million, Quebec $73.3 million, Ontario $34.1 million, Manitoba $2.1 million, Saskatchewan $1.1 million, Alberta $2.1 million, and British Columbia $2.1 million.

Blizzard Halts Volcano Fighters

REYKJAVIK (Reuter) — One of the most savage Arctic blizzards in many years continued to rage over Iceland today, blocking roads, cutting power and telephone lines and impeding salvage work from a recent volcanic eruption.

Two United States C-130 Hercules transport planes, sent at the request of the Icelandic government to salvage expensive fisheries machinery threatened by lava flows on Westman Island, had to turn back to their base on the mainland because snow drifts prevented them from landing.

Firemen fighting the glowing lava which has been engulfing the island since the eruption of a long-dormant volcano three weeks ago, had to give up their efforts because of the freezing weather.

They said the lava had built a seven-to-ten-yard-high wall outside the eastern part of Vestmannaeyjar, the island's principal town, and that the hot bubbling stream was only 35 yards from the outskirts of the community.

"We must try anything to stop the direction of the lava flow if the town itself is to be saved," a member of the Vestmannaeyjar town council said.

Workers used fire hoses before the water froze to cool the lava and make it harden. The hope was that the hardened mass would serve as a defensive wall against new lava streams.

Parts of the country are without electricity.

No trace has been found of 11 crew members and passengers on an Icelandic fishing vessel who took to rubber dinghies after their ship sank in a storm Sunday about 100 miles south of Iceland.

DEVALUED DOLLAR 'JUST START'

Nixon Talking Tough on Trade

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon said today the 10 per cent devaluation of the United States dollar Monday night must be followed by tough trade legislation erecting some barriers "to get a fairer shake" for U.S. businessmen and ease that country's chronic trade deficit.

The president also indicated a sterner U.S. stance in trade talks with other countries, saying efforts will be made to erase restrictions on U.S. sales abroad.

Nixon said the legislation is needed to "get other nations away from their discriminatory policies."

"Devaluation of the dollar . . . is at best only a temporary solution" to lose pressure on the dollar, the president said.

He gave no specifics on his proposals but said he was "not talking about another round of lowering barriers."

"We must go up as well as down," the president said, because that is "the only way to get a fair shake for America abroad."

"Only by being able to go up" in some trade categories "will we be able to get others to come down," he said.

He and Treasury Secretary George Shultz discussed the impact of U.S. markets being flooded by foreign-produced goods and the president said that in some cases the imports can "drive a U.S. business right out of existence."

"To get a policy of freer trade we must always have in the background protection," Nixon said.

U.S. stock markets today went wild in early trading with the Dow Jones stock index jumping a record 21.60 points to 1013.17 in the first half-hour of business.

NO TIMETABLE

A record 15.69 million shares changed hands in the first two hours of trading on Wall Street and then slowed and prices fell slightly as profit-takers moved in.

The market closed at 996.69 on the index a gain of five points overall for the day.

Shultz had said in announcing the dollar devaluation Monday night that Nixon would send Congress "comprehensive trade legislation" with unspecified safeguards against disruption of domestic industries as a result of imports.

Nixon set no timetable for submission of the legislation.

But the package cannot go to Capital Hill before next week, since Congress is in recess.

In Ottawa, Finance Minister John Turner confirmed that the Canadian dollar will continue to float, or find its own value on foreign-exchange markets.

RUNNING PARALLEL

Turner had been advised in advance of the U.S. decision.

Trade Minister Alastair Gillespie predicted the Canadian dollar will follow the drop of the U.S. dollar in relation to other currencies.

When the U.S. last devalued its currency in December, 1971—an effective devaluation of about 11 per cent—the Canadian dollar followed more or less in step despite the publicly-expressed anticipation of U.S. officials that it would not fall as much.

On the London foreign exchange market the Canadian dollar was "running more or less parallel with the United States dollar," a banking spokesman said.

The Royal Bank of Canada here advised Canadian tourists to exchange only enough money for their immediate needs allowing several days for the market to settle down.

Generally the Canadian dollar was a little stronger than the U.S. one, closing at $100.75 in terms of U.S. funds.

OWEN NAMED LT.-GOV.

Walter Stewart Owen of Vancouver has been appointed lieutenant-governor of British Columbia, the prime minister's office announced in Ottawa today. (Background story on Page 2).

Owen, to be sworn into office March 19, replaces J. R. Nicholson, who is retiring for personal reasons.

Socred Guards Books

At a two-minute meeting this morning the NDP government took the first step in honoring a pre-election pledge of full financial accountability in the administration of the province.

For the first time in more than 20 years, an opposition MLA — Alex Fraser (SC Cariboo) — was elected to the key job of chairing the legislature's select standing committee on public accounts and printing.

Under the former Social Credit administration the position always went to a Socred. As a result, opposition parties consistently complained they were frustrated in their efforts to call ministers before the committee and examine all government books to determine how the public's money was being spent.

The conveners of the various select standing committees are usually named chairmen but at today's first meeting of the public accounts committee when convener Chris D'Arcy (NDP—Rossland-Trail) called for nominations, Fraser was nominated by Newell Morrison (SC—Victoria) and unanimously elected.

Roy Cummings (NDP—Little Mountain) was elected secretary.

SPILL COMMITTEE

Jim Gorst (NDP-Esquimalt) was elected chairman of the legislature's special committee on oil spills.

Harold Steeves (NDP-Richmond) was elected secretary of the committee at its organizational meeting.

The committee was established earlier this session by Premier Barrett to look into the problem of oil transportation through B.C. coastal waters.

Six other select standing committees also held their first organizational meetings today and the posts of chairman and secretaries chosen in each case were NDP.

Forestry and fisheries: chairman, Robert Skelly (Alberni), secretary, Don Lockstead (Mackenzie).

Mining and railways: chairman, Graham Lee (Prince Rupert); secretary, Alf Nunweiler (Fort George).

Labor: chairman, Colin Gablemann (North Vancouver-Seymour); secretary, Graham Lea (Prince Rupert).

Agriculture: chairman, Gerry Anderson (Kamloops); secretary, Lorne Nicolson (Nelson-Creston).

Social welfare and education: chairman, Rosemary Brown (Vancouver Burrard); secretary, Peter Rolston (Dewdney).

Municipal matters: chairman, Alf Nunweiler; secretary, Carl Liden (Delta).

The Naked Truth

A Vancouver Island school teacher took some pictures of crows in the trees near the legislature Monday afternoon. He also shot pictures of a lark.

"I was poising my camera when I suddenly saw naked flesh. I couldn't believe it."

Two teenage boys, about 16, had climbed the tree and stripped naked.

"I thought it just couldn't be true, especially not in Victoria," he said. So he took pictures of the event for posterity.

The teacher, who said he would prefer his name not be used, said he was at the buildings with his class Monday afternoon for a tour of the legislature.

While the students were on a guided tour, the teacher decided to take pictures of some of Victoria's more spectacular sights.

"I heard some crows cawing up the tree and I thought that might make a good picture," he said.

"But when I looked up . . . I almost dropped my camera.

"I guess they climbed up and then took their clothes off. It was quite chilly."

Temperature at 1:30 p.m. was a cool 47 degrees.

Later the boys came down, getting dressed on the way.

They gave no explanation for their tree-top cavorting.

The incident was not on the police blotter today, indicating that nobody complained.

When told about the incident, one passerby commented: "Naked up a tree? Must have been taxpayers!"

Pollution Fixing Costs Ford $7M

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Ford Motor Co. was fined $7 million today on charges that its employees illegally tampered with 1973 Ford cars undergoing anti-pollution tests, the U.S. justice department said.

At the same time, the company in Detroit and Oakville announced record earnings for both the Canadian and U.S. operations.

Ford filed a no-contest plea to a 350-count criminal information, filed in the U.S. District Court in Detroit by the justice department, and signed a consent decree concluding a civil suit.

The court proposed the maximum fine of $3.5 million in the criminal case. It also approved a $3.5 million penalty agreed to by Ford and the government in the civil case.

In addition, Ford was enjoined from committing similar violations in the future. The matter goes back to last April and May when Ford submitted its anti-pollution test data required for federal certification of its 1973 cars.

On May 16, the firm withdrew its application and told the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) they had been based on tests which included unauthorized and previously unreported maintenance.

The Clean Air Act and EPA regulations make it a criminal offence knowingly to submit false information on testing and reporting of maintenance on prototype engines.

The criminal information charged Ford with making four false reports to the EPA in its applications for certification of four sizes of engines.

The criminal action contained 346 counts specifying engine maintenance that was not reported such as installing new spark plugs, regapping spark plugs, resetting ignition timing, replacing points and cleaning carburetors.

Ford in Detroit reported sales and net income reached all-time highs.

Worldwide dollar sales for Ford was $20.2 billion, up 23 per cent from sales of $16.4 billion in 1971.

Henry Ford II, board chairman, and Lee Iacocca, president, reported consolidated net income hit a record $870 million in 1972, compared with $657 million in 1971, and the previous record of $703 million in 1965.

They said earnings equalled $8.52 a share last year, up 38 per cent from the $6.18 a share earned in 1971 and a 35-per-cent increase over the previous high of $6.33 a share in 1965.

In Oakville, Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. consolidated net income after taxes in 1972 was $101,600,000 or $12.25 a share, up 34 per cent from $75,800,000 and $9.14 in the previous year.

Consolidated sales rose to a record $3,084 million from $2,468 in 1971. They include the company's Canadian operations and those in overseas subsidiaries in Australia, South Africa, New Zealand and Singapore. Sales to the U.S. parent company also were included for the first time.

Canadian sales, including those to Ford in the U.S., increased 26 per cent to $2,378 million from $1,895 million.

Net income from Canadian operations totalled $90,500,000, a 69-per-cent jump from $53,400,000 in 1971.

POSTIES VOTING ON NEW CONTRACT

OTTAWA (CP) — Postal workers will decide today and Wednesday whether to endorse or reject a tentative contract settlement worked out three weeks ago between union and government negotiators.

As voting began the 28,000 members of the Council of Postal Unions were weighing statements by their leaders for and against the proposals.

Results of the vote are expected Thursday or Friday.

Acceptance of the tentative agreement will mean an end to threats of a legal nationwide postal strike until 1975. Contract talks began a year ago and the last working agreement expired in March.

James McCall, a co-chairman of the council, said Monday he was hoping for a heavy turnout by the postal workers.

Hanoi Frees Canadian

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Marc Cayer, one of two Canadians held as prisoners of war by North Vietnam, has been released in Hanoi, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp told the Commons today.

Cayer was captured in Vietnam during the 1968 Tet offensive.

Sharp said he had been released into the custody of the Canadian representative at Hanoi.

The minister said Cayer was well and in good spirits and arrangements were being made to return the prisoner home.

Sharp made no reference to Lloyd Oppel of Courtenay, B.C., the second Canadian prisoner in North Vietnam who was captured in Laos last fall.

Meanwhile, North Vietnam has agreed to release 20 more prisoners of war within the next few days, the Pentagon announced today.

The surprise release will raise to 163 the number of Americans freed by Hanoi and the Viet Cong.

Preliminary medical examinations today showed the 142 prisoners freed Monday are in generally good health.

Two of them may fly to the United States today to be at the bedsides of critically-ill relatives.

Alaska Fights Ruling

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Alaska will ask the United States Supreme Court to review a lower-court ruling that has blocked construction of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline, Gov. William Egan says.

Construction was sidetracked last Friday by a ruling of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

The state also will ask the interior department to shift to Alaska control of the 789-mile pipeline corridor from the Arctic North Slope to the southern port of Valdez, Egan said Monday.

Meanwhile, Alaska Senators Ted Stevens and Mike Gravel said they plan to introduce legislation to permit construction of the line.

"Indeed, the challenge facing policy makers in the coming year will be to avoid a recession of classic dimension," said Wildred Lewis Jr., chief economist for the National Planning Association, Washington.

Henry Kaufman, an economist with Salmon Brothers, New York, told a congressional committee, "late this year, or no later than early 1974, the real rate of economic growth may be only a small fraction of the current high rate, and a complete lack of real growth for a short time span cannot be entirely ruled out."

Lewis and Kaufman disagreed somewhat on the fine points of what could be done about it, but their central theme was the same: The economy is booming at such a pace now that inflation is inevitable, and inflation will lead to recession.

Kaufman said an "enormously stimulative fiscal and monetary expansion" had fired up an economic boom, but that steps had not been taken to assure that the boom could be controlled before inflation sets in.

"Now we are in the midst of an economic boom, moving to even higher utilization of real resources with the U.S. unemployment rate falling perhaps to 4.5 per cent by mid-year," Kaufman said.

"If additional excesses are to be avoided and the boom is to continue, checking inflation is necessary but extremely dif-
